

JANSEN RD. TO KEEP UP STATE HIGHWAY FIGHT

Commission Engineers, Under Titus, Considering Specifications.

Revival of the fight between crushed stone and gravel interests, which for a time threatened to demoralize the engineering force of the State highway commission, is anticipated in the road body's forthcoming verdict on specifications for the Charles H. Jansen Rd. in Marion County.

The commission itself will not enter as actively in the present controversy as it did in the squabble several days ago, it is believed however.

Specifications on the Jansen Rd. were turned over to the commission several days ago for action.

Study Specifications

William J. Titus, named to succeed Chesleigh Gray as chief engineer for the commission, said his men are engaged in a study of the specifications and that a report will be ready in a few days. It was learned that highway engineers under Titus pronounce the coarse aggregate specifications on the Jansen Rd. as the "Schmidt mixture."

County commissioners approved paving the road, which extends northeast on the north side of Fall Creek from Thirty-Eighth St bridge to Keystone Rd.

The specifications on the Jansen Rd. are those prescribed some time ago for Marion County by George G. Schmidt, county surveyor. The highway commission ordered Chesleigh Gray, chief engineer, to discredit the Schmidt specifications on the Main Rd., another Marion County highway. Gray refused and was discharged. He declared Schmidt's specifications superior to those of the highway commission.

Disapproval Seen

Titus, who succeeded Gray, has indicated a willingness to agree with the commission's recommendations, so it is thought likely the Jansen specifications will be disapproved.

"We're going to follow the policy of the highway commission in this matter," Titus said today.

Titus announced that he had accepted the resignation of R. E. Flinley, engineer in charge of bridge design. He said Flinley's withdrawal was for business reasons and not because of disension. Two other highway engineers, Myron G. Johnson and John G. Willis, resigned when Gray was discharged and a wholesale walkout was predicted.

HOOSIER SEEKS LIGHT ON HIS CLOUDED PAST

Crawfordsville Man Lies in Haze in Hospital at Denver.

By United Press
DENVER, Colo., Aug. 7.—William David Sorrels, 49, in a hospital here is trying today to pierce the haze that has made his activities during the last few years a mystery.

Sorrels was informed yesterday his mother was on the way here to see him from Crawfordsville, Ind. He said when informed of his mother's coming, that he had supposed her dead.

Today, the man, suffering from an acute heart affliction says that about all he knows about himself, he has been in Missouri, Oklahoma and Colorado during the years since he left his home in Crawfordsville, immediately after his father's death. He tells a story of a woman who has taken care of him in his many sicknesses. He says he does not know the woman other than that she has always taken care of him.

A woman was at the hospital yesterday to see him, but was not questioned by attendants.

Sorrels says she told him he had a wife and three children.

It is believed by attendants at the hospital that Sorrels is well educated and has tasted the luxuries of life, although now in the charity ward.

A man giving the name of Robert H. Burns befriended Sorrels here and got him in the hospital.

Burns says Sorrel told him he had left a fortune in Indiana following a quarrel after the death of his father, "and the next time his folks saw him he would be in a casket."
