FORD GIVES HIS AIRCRAFT VIEWS

Ford smiles dryly at the suggestion that this signifies complete success for commercial aviation in near future.

"I wish I could see it," he comments. From the Ford airport at Dearborn, all-metal "sky trucks" daily sail away to Cleveland and Chicago, carrying a thousand pounds of freight.

Ford thinks these are the best

I introduced FOLEY'S HONEY & TAR to several of my friends and they think it's the best they ever used." Gas Tank Kills Horse

By Times Special
ELLENVILLE, Ill., Sept. 10.—Expressmen at Columbia, near here, left a steel tank containing gas for use in charging carbonated water on the sidewalk in the sun. The gas expanded and blew out a safety valve in the end of the tank. In a moment the tank hurtled across the street, broke a telephone pole, knocked potatoes from a truck, killed a horse and did minor damage before the gas escaped.

airplanes that engineering talent has yet developed. But he thinks the machines are still crude, costly, inefficient, measured by his vision of what the sky carrier of the future will be.

"Aviation is in its infancy," Ford puts it.

"What's the trouble with the airplane?" he is asked.

"The engine," he replies.

The Ford Motor Company built thousands of Liberty motors for the government during the war. Now it is buying back these same motors to install in its own planes.

But whatever happens in aviation, Henry Ford has no desire to fly.

He has never ridden in an airplane or airship, and never intends to, despite reports that he planned a trip in the United States.

When it soared over Detroit on its return from the Middle West.

"I can imagine what flying is like to my perfect satisfaction," says Ford.

Will Ford Retire?

Henry Ford may administer a knockout blow to the confidence of his Ford Motor Company business associates some of these days.

Ford may retire.

"You never can tell," says Ford.

"Henry Ford retire? Never!" say

POLICE PROBE FIRE

A police investigation of a fire at Fifty-Second St. and Boulevard Pl. that destroyed a touring car revealed that it had probably been set on fire, reports show today. Officers say the license plates and other marks of identification were removed and the gasoline tank cap taken off.

"It's the same thing," says Ford. There are no fine distinctions in the Ford reasoning.

"Do you get more personal satisfaction out of making more jobs for people, or making more automobiles for them?" he is asked.

"It's all the same," is Ford's answer.
