The TANGLE

Without any more ado, Little Marquise, I made up my mind that the only thing would be to tell Sally all I knew about the girl Maggie Simpson. You see, I inclined to Jimmie's way of thinking, and was sure her name was Maggie instead of Margarita.

Sally was the logical one to fix up matters at the office, and I would not need to be mentioned in the matter at all; neither would I have to speak to Jack about it.

I ordered the roadster, thinking I would drive myself down. I would go leisurely, and get the whole subject well fixed in my mind. But, alas, you can propose as much as you wish, but when your mother-in-law is living with you, your time is disposed of often as she wishes. As I came out of my room I met John's mother at the door.

"You're not going out again?" she demanded.

"Yes," I answered shortly. "But I wanted to talk to you about Hannah and the children. Leslie, do you know that you are out so much that you do not know what that woman is doing with them. To-day when I was in the nursery for a short time, Jack struck little Buddy."

"Yes, Hannah told me."

"Do you mean to tell me that you didn't mind it?"

"I mean to tell you that I have settled the question entirely."

"I hope you told her, then, that if it happened again she would be discharged," Mrs. Prescott interrupted. "I did nothing of the kind," I retorted. "Hannah has been with me a great many years. She was with me before little Sydney came, and I would trust her judgment in the care of the children above any one else."

"Then I have nothing more to say."

(Little Marquise, you were relieved of meddling old women in your home by having a lover instead of a husband. There are some mothers-in-law who are angels on earth, but unfortunately John's mother does not belong to that category.)

"Do you really understand," said Mrs. Prescott, Sr., although she had just told me she would say no more on the subject—"Do you really understand," she repeated, "what that woman is doing with your children's characters? You will be sorry some day that you have allowed her to spread dissension between those two boys. You know I always disapprove of bringing a child to unknown parentage into the house, and today when I saw that boy strike my son's child, I was horrified. I had an illustration of what we might expect in the future."

"I probably made my opinions known," she continued, "for I was answered very disrespectfully by Hannah, and as I rose to put the baby—your own baby—off my lap, Jack ran forward and knocked him over again, cutting a great gash in his head. He might have killed him."

"We won't discuss it, Mrs. Prescott," I interrupted coldly, for I knew if I let myself go I would say something I would be sorry for. (Copyright, 1925, NEA Service, Inc.)

GOOD RIDDANCE TO MAN WHO CALLS ONLY TO PET

To pet or not to pet. That seems to be the question number of letters. Girls seem unable to answer this question themselves satisfactorily.

They want to be popular; they want plenty of beaux; and if petting is part of the bargain they insist on petting. But do I think it's right? I think that if the only attraction they have for the men they meet is a pair of free lips, they're pretty poor bargains themselves, and they won't retain their beaux long.

"But Miss Lee, we lose the boys if we don't let them pet!" Then, it's good riddance to bad rubbish! For you girls only lose the wrong kind of men in such cases. A man's not going to marry the girl who will let every man who comes along make love to her. He's going to marry the one who is respected by everyone, himself included.

What's a Girl to Do?

Dear Miss Lee: I am a girl of 20, and people seem to find me attractive. For six months I have been keeping steady company with a man five years older than I. He has never kissed me or even tried to until a few nights ago when he suddenly threw his arms around me, told me he loved me and tried to force his kisses on me. I slipped away from him and I haven't seen him since. I don't let a man kiss me or even touch me if he looks around for some other girl who will pet with him.

DOWNHEARTED.

You lose only the wrong kind of a man when you refuse him the privilege of an engagement before he asks you to marry him. If he had asked you to marry him, perhaps you were a little abrupt, but it appears that he was a little too sudden! The sort of man a girl wants for a husband is not the kind to kiss and ride away, but the kind who tells her he loves her, asks her to marry him and seals the bargain with a kiss that means more than a thrill. A man may take his love affairs lightly, but he takes his marriage seriously. He knows that marriage can make him or break him. If you do not love him, then the incident is closed. He will, if he's any good at all, probably want to return to ask your pardon. Let him.

'Complacent Angler'

Dear Miss Lee: I am a young girl of 17, have brown hair and blue eyes. People say I am nice looking, but I can't let or keep follow. I act or think I up, like other girls, I am rather stupid. I wish I knew why I can't let follow. I am so lonely and how to keep one? Will the book about "Fascinating Womanhood," do you say good about getting a fellow? Perhaps you are too much like other girls. How's a man going to pick out the girl he wants when there are a million that are as identical alike as peas in a pod? Develop an individuality of your own. Read, so you are not tongue-tied when men are about. Have something interesting to talk about, and don't make it clothes or some other subject in which men are not the least interested. The boys you will meet at your age are probably not
