Jack suddenly got to his feet, pacing down the room.

"We must get away from here. I want to see that man. I'll soon put him right. Get your things, Mrs. Atherton. I'm going right down to the plant. I'll soon finish that blackmailer."

I felt I could stand no more bickering. Little Marquise, and so I said: "Jack, please, take me home. I came away without paying my usual morning visit to the children and I have much to do in the house."

"Don't you think you'd better come along, Leslie? I want that man to see you and know that you know all about it. That will put him right on this thing quicker than anything else."

"Of course, I'll come, if you really think it necessary, but honestly I don't think I could stand much more today. I didn't sleep hardly any last night. Besides you know you said that you wished you could keep me out of the mess. I have no desire to meet Miss Simpson or her father. If you don't desire to take me home, I will telephone and have Edward bring down my roomer."

"No," interrupted Sally, "that won't do at all. Mr. Prescott would get a reputation of being promiscuous in his attentions to his stenographers. Of course, it will be much better if Leslie stays out of it, but you and I must take her home, or, what is better, let me go to the office on the bus, and after you have deposited Leslie at her house, you can come on down to the office, as though nothing had happened."

Jack, although he did not want to, gave in to Sally's plan and we started home.

I did not say anything, Little Marquise. It seemed as though fate was determined to make me unhappy under whatever circumstance.

Almost anyone would envy me, I am sure. Here I am rich enough to satisfy any of my demands, two beautiful children, a wonderful home that just suits me, and yet, something is always turning up which makes me feel that I would give anything in the world if I could have just a little old bungalow and Jack and I might be in moderate circumstances.

As it is, my husband is always getting into some sort of trouble, as you know, Little Marquise. At that I really do not think he means to do anything wrong. He just hates his own company and never considers consequences when his impulses are concerned.

When we arrived at our home, Jack put his arms around me and kissed me good-bye at the door. He is not usually so demonstrative and I was rather surprised until he said, "Don't look now, but there are a reporter and a cameraman across the street, and if they must have a story for their papers, they might as well have a good one." With this he drove away and I rushed up the stairs to the children.

The nurse met me at the door of the nursery saying that Buddy was a little peevish and calling for me and so I stopped long, long letter until some other time, Little Marquise.

BUCK'S New Direct Heater

—Come and see how it heats the whole house

Note the above illustration of Buck's new Direct Heater. Its handsome cabinet is finished in brown-grained mahogany. Its heating principle is as different from an ordinary stove as it looks. Stoves depend on radiation for results. This heater depends on circulating hot air thruout the house—drawing the cold air from the floors into the bottom of the cabinet. It has a hot-air circulating capacity six times greater than the largest base burner—an ample capacity for 5 or 6 rooms. We are conducting a special demonstration on it this week. If you are using an old-style heating stove you shouldn't miss seeing how you can use this remarkable heater to great advantage in your home.
