Plane Fatalities Mount During Aeronautics Trial.

By Times Special
WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—The fatal airplane crash near Cape May Court House, N. J., which caused the death of three Army fliers Monday, raised the rate of aircraft fatalities in the United States to at least one a day for the last fortnight. During that period aeronautics has been on trial before the President's special aircraft board which last week ended its hearings to study testimony presented before it. All these accidents have occurred with the Shenandoah disaster and the near loss of the PN-9 still fresh in the memory of the country.

In the most recent crashes, three men lost their lives near New Salem, Pa., one flier was killed during the races at Mitchell Field, L. I., an air mail pilot lost his life in an accident in Pennsylvania; three were killed in or near Chicago, and two commercial fliers lost their lives at Long Beach, Cal.
