

PRIVATE WORKS FIND SANCTION ANEW IN RUSSIA

Communist Theories Modified, Goodrich Reports to President.

Indianapolis enterprise is again finding some sanction in Russia. That is the report brought back by James P. Goodrich, former Governor of Indiana and for three months a semi-official observer in Russia for the Washington Administration, according to a Washington dispatch. Goodrich's full report is to be made later.

Russia, according to Goodrich, is slowly modifying her earlier communist theories, and this has resulted in a rebirth of the ancient guild system which flourished throughout Europe during the middle ages.

"Russian workers," he explains, are grouping themselves together in various semi-private enterprises. The government, for example, announces it will erect a new public building. At once a group of workers organize and volunteer to take charge at an agreed sum. The group is allowed to pocket any profits made."

From 80 to 90 per cent of the Government's textile mills recently have been placed on a piece-work basis, Goodrich says, pointing out that this allows increased individual enterprise.

He believes the change will result in more efficiency in Russia.

As examples of alleged inefficiency that has existed he cites that up to recently it cost $1,052 to build a Ford in Moscow and from $3 to $4 per ton to mine coal in government mines.

Goodrich found Russian workers well satisfied generally with a government which allows every worker three to six months extra pay for the birth of a child, which gives free medical and hospital attention and which provides workers with homes for $5 a month.

Russian brain workers have recently been accorded equal privileges with other workers, Goodrich discovered. A college professor now rides free on government street cars just as though he were a bricklayer.

SOME INTERESTING FEATURES

Statistically inclined folks might be interested in the fact that automobiles of the Paramount Hollywood studio have traveled a distance equal to nearly thirteen times around the world at the equator. They've gone—in one year—317,000 miles. This includes trucks, touring cars, buses, etc. They consumed 117,000 gallons of gasoline during the year.

BIG BARBECUE

Vows to be Reaffirmed

MARRIAGE vows made in the dark days before the Civil War will be reaffirmed Nov. 12 at 3 a. m. by Willis B. Black, 85, colored, of 517 Ogden St., and his wife, Mrs. Mary Ann Seymour Black, 85, colored, at the Mt. Zion Baptist Church, Twelfth and Fayette Sts. It will be the sixty-fifth anniversary of their wedding.

tion in Boone County, Kentucky, Feb. 14, 1840, and when he was still a babe in arms he was sold in slavery to Whitfield Hayden, Jessamine County, Kentucky. He married Miss Seymour when they were 20 years old. After the war they were released from slavery and came to Indianapolis.

The Rev. S. B. Butler, pastor of the Mt. Zion Baptist Church, will perform the ceremony.

Judge Makes Awards in Indianapolis Times and Famous Players-Lasky 'Pony Express' Contest.

Ruth Elizabeth Bonfield, 1014 E. Market St., Shortridge High School student, won the first prize in the Indianapolis Times and Famous Players-Lasky "Pony Express" essay contest.

Miss Bonfield has been sent her check for $20 because of the merit of her essay as determined by the contest editor and two members of The Times staff.

The second prize of $10 was awarded to Collier H. Young, 5009 E. Washington St., also of Shortridge. The third cash prize of $5 was awarded to Nellie Hollcraft, 416 Parkway Ave.

The following ten Indianapolis school children were awarded a pair of tickets to see "The Pony Express," Paramount movie of the west, now on view at the Apollo.

Tickets Given

John Meyer, 417 E. Pratt St., sixth grade.

Margaret Epperson, 1021 W. Thirty-Seventh, Shortridge High School.

Pauline West, 1401 N. Belle View Place.

Camille Edwards, 509 N. East St., grade 7B.

Louise Kunkel, 1429 N. Lee St. Helen Biehl, 2231 S. Meridian St.

Martha Blackwell, 936 Union St., grade 7A.

Selma Farb, 1236 E. Ohio St., Arsenal Technical High School.

Milford Dullberger, 221 Park Ave., Indianapolis, grade 8A.

The Times staff judges took in consideration the neatness of the essays, style and extent of the subject matter.

It was a difficult job to decide as all essays had good points.

The winning essay by Miss Ruth Elizabeth Bonfield follows:

"On March 26, 1860, amid flags flying, bands playing and people cheering, Johnnie Fry dashed away from St. Joseph, Missouri, on the first stage of the Pony Express. Nine days and twenty-three hours later the trip ended successfully at Sacramento, Cal.

"The Pony Express of 1860 was a system of rapid transit carrying mail from the Missouri River to the coast on a schedule ten days shorter than the three previous stage routes, Panama, 'Butterfield,' and Central.

"There had been introduced into Congress by Senator Gwyn, in the winter of 1855, a bill concerning a Pony Express to the West, which idea had been inspired in him by B. P. Ficklin, a companion while on his way to the East from the far and distant West. The bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, where it was quietly 'killed.' In 1860 the Pony Express came into existence under the Central Overland California and Pike's Peak Express Company, which organization employed the best horses and riders in the country.

"The swift Pony Express brought the news of Lincoln's election to California just in time to prevent it from joining the Confederacy. "Great were the dangers of deserts, blizzards and wild Indians enured by the fearless riders as in the glorious sunlight or the mystic night they traversed the wilderness on their mission of civilization. "Although the Pony Express was a financial failure and lasted only sixteen months, it showed that a transcontinental railroad would be practical and proved the greatness of American spirit and determination."

Meetings to End

The long days of noon and night meetings for the two candidates are nearly ended. Myers closed his noon speaking campaign with a meeting at Kingman's today.

Duvall will end his speaking this week-end.

Whether the patient, defensive tactics of the Republicans with their reiteration of conservative doctrines will win as opposed to the vigorous onslaughts of the Democrats, will be determined Tuesday.

Duvall has chosen to ignore most of the sallies of Myers.

The Republican city organization has refused to act concerning charges by Myers that one of their councilman candidates is a convicted bootlegger.

Myers placed the Republican nominees in a hole when he charged Duvall's assertions regarding political activity of police and firemen were hypocritical, inasmuch as city firemen and police now are beating the bushes in his behalf.

Myers Criticized

Duvall criticized Myers because Myers was city attorney during the Bell administration. Duvall recalling the Bell vote fraud case.

Myers and other Democratic orators answer this with the assertion that John C. Ruckelshaus, Duvall's campaign manager, was attorney for many of the Democrats in the Bell case and that several of the indicted men, who were Democratic precinct committeemen then, now have switched over and are Republican precinct committeemen working for Duvall.

The chief "goat" in the melee is the Shank administration. The Democrats have fired heavy blasts at the city hall.

Duvall's cohorts have refused to defend the present administration, which, in the main, is backing him with fair loyalty.

BOOTLEG KING HAS $22,000,000 CASH

George Remus, Before Federal Grand Jury, Richest Witness Ever Called—Business Efficient.

George Remus of Cincinnati, bootleg king, before a Federal grand jury here this week in connection with investigation of a booze ring, is probably the richest man ever called before the local Federal Court, Federal agents say.

A few days before he went to Atlanta penitentiary, two years ago, he deposited $21,000,000 in a Cincinnati bank to have "cash in reserve when he was released."

And federal agents say his bootlegging organization probably was one of the best ever established in this country. It was nation wide in scope for two years, seemed impregnable to attack for officers of the law.

Remus, now under $50,000 bond, appeared before the grand jury here in connection with the alleged "milking" of $30 barrels of whiskey in the Jack Daniels distillery at St. Louis. Water was substituted for liquor.

The liquor removed from the large reels was used in supplying customers of the organization, it is said.

Without doubt, the bootlegging outfit had better financial backing than most legitimate business concerns. Federal Court records show that from $10,000 to $120,000 was deposited in a bank at Cincinnati by Remus under an assumed name. Over a period of sixteen months, $23,000,000 was deposited in this bank.

But there seemed to be some flaw in the workings of the crowd that furnished a loop-hole for Federal investigators in 1923.

The first slip came when Indiana prohibition agents captured two men who had four barrels of the Remus whiskey in their possession. This was before Christmas of that year, and the arrested men confessed they were making preparations to supply holiday demand.

These men told of the operations of the crowd which led to an investigation on the part of Federal prohibition director of Indiana, who uncovered their operations in Death Valley, Ohio, near Cincinnati.

Agents found that the warehouse and distillery there were guarded by twelve armed men.

The agents succeeded in capturing these men and confiscating the liquor. Later the men were indicted in the Federal Court here, but the case was transferred for trial to the Cincinnati court. Remus was sentenced to two years in the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta and fined $10,000. He was released from Atlanta Sept. 1, after serving twenty-one months of his sentence. He is probably the only man who ever went to prison in his own private car.

Remus was able to work up an efficient organization by buying the property and goods of men in the same business and allying them to him. He is said to have had controlling interest in seven large distilleries which he used as supply sources for his trade.

He was not satisfied with the amount of liquor on hand. After emptying the barrels, which originally contained 110 proof whiskey, the whiskey was cut. The barrels were steamed and through this process about two gallons of sixty proof whiskey were obtained from each barrel.

If 10,000 barrels of whiskey were sold, the total net proceeds were about $15,000,000, it is estimated.
