

QUIZ OF CAUSES OF FLYER CRASH STARTED BY U. S.

Engineer of Wrecked Train, Which Killed Ten, Suspended by Road.

By United Press
TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 13.—Federal investigation into yesterday's wreck near Monmouth Junction when the Pennsylvania's Mercantile Express from St. Louis crashed into the rear of the overnight express from Washington got underway today.

The death list reached ten when the last body, that of an unidentified man, clad in pajamas, was taken from the twist of steel last night.

Two of the dead are as yet unidentified in a New Brunswick morgue. Six persons are in hospitals with severe injuries.

A statement by the Pennsylvania railroad read, "The Pennsylvania's committee in charge of the inquiry reached the conclusion that the engineer of the Mercantile Express did not observe the signals, which were properly set and in working order." The engineer, Timothy J. Carroll, who had been at the throttle twenty-five years without a mishap, has been suspended.

Winter Heating Blamed for Diseases

City Health Secretary Says Homes and Offices Too Warm.

Our ancestors who kept warm around the open fireplace at a temperature of 50 to 60 degrees were healthier than the present generation, believes Dr. Herman G. Morgan, city health secretary.

The old fashioned fireplace was nearer nature's plan of direct radiation than our modern heating systems, he said.

"Winter diseases will continue to reap their harvest with a continued upward trend until civilization adopts proper ventilation, circulation and sufficient moisture in hot air houses," said Dr. Morgan.

Are Devilized

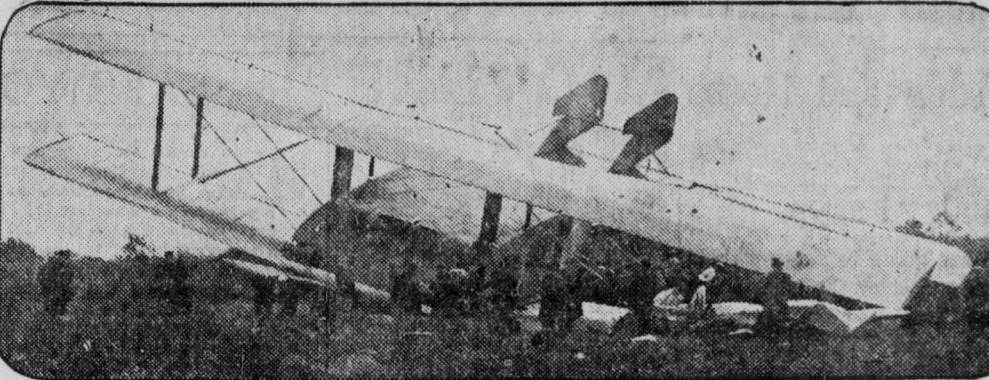

"Present living conditions tend to devitalize the air and favor winter diseases under the classification of respiratory infections. Housing and ventilating methods bear direct relationship to increase the prevalence of winter malady."

"Chills run up the spines of this generation at the thought of living in winter in a room 50 to 60 degrees, the ideal temperature of three generations ago."

Skin Becomes Dry

"With the advent of cool weather and kindling of fires, the entire population in the temperate zone goes into kiln-dried air hibernation, and consequently the skin on our bodies becomes dry and chapped. The protective secretion on the lining of our nose and throat evaporates and it feels as if those anatomical struc-

Giant Plane Falls With Freight Cargo

The Miss Essex, said to be the largest commercial plane in the world, crashed to earth because of engine trouble at Seekonk, Mass. The monster, with a wing span of eighty-seven feet, was en route from Hartford, Conn., to Boston with an automobile as its cargo.

tures would at times crack, which means we are living under ideal conditions for development of respiratory infections." The public would have less use for the clinical thermometer if it paid more attention to the house, flat and office thermometer and to humidity and circulation of air, Dr. Morgan says.

MONEY AND LIFE TERM

PRAGUE.—Ivan Puschkasch learned that he won $100,000 a few hours after he received a life sentence for murder. Puschkasch had quarrelled with his wife over the purchase of a $3 lottery ticket and killed her. And it was this ticket which brought him the $100,000 grand prize.

It is said that the world's richest area lies in East Sumatra, in the East Indies.
