

IF HOUSE ACTS, INDIANA LOSES A CONGRESSMAN

Reapportionment on Census Basis Is Up Again.

Times Washington Bureau.
WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—In spite of the absolute refusal of Congress to far to consider reapportionment of the House of Representatives following the 1920 census, Representatives H. E. Barbour of California will try again this winter to put the House on a numerical basis.

The refusal of every Congress since 1920 to reapportion is absolutely without precedent. Since 1790, when the first census was taken, no Congress has ever failed to make an allotment of representatives for each State before the next general election.

"Failure Incomprehensible"
"The absolute failure of Congress to comply with this requirement of the Constitution is incomprehensible," says Barbour. "The eighteenth amendment is not the only respect in which the law of the land is being disregarded."

But this is the sticking point: Every other Congress has adopted a basis of reapportionment that would increase the numbers of the House of Representatives. States with growing population have had increased representation but none of the States have had their delegations reduced.

Because of the unwieldy aspect of a larger Congress Barbour proposes to keep the number of Representatives at 435, re-allocating the members on the basis of the 1920 census so that eleven states would lose one or two members, nine would gain, and the rest would be unchanged.

Indiana Would Lose
Under the Barbour plan these states would each lose one representative: Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Mississippi, Nebraska, Rhode Island and Vermont; and Missouri would lose two.

California would gain three, Connecticut one, Illinois two, Michigan two, New Jersey one, North Carolina one, Ohio two, Texas one, and Washington one.

Massachusetts has recently threatened to reapportion without waiting for Congress, and that threat may precipitate action this year. Further there is a chance that Clarence J. McLeod of Michigan may fall heir to the chairmanship of the Census committee, and he favors immediate action.

Woman Prosecutes Murder Case

Miss Jessie Levy

THE distinction of being the first woman to prosecute a murder case in Marion County Criminal Court goes to Miss Jessie Levy, Indianapolis attorney. She assisted Deputy Prosecutor Judson L. Stark in prosecuting John Smith, colored, found guilty of second degree murder Wednesday afternoon. Special Judge Fremont Alford will sentence Smith to life imprisonment later.

Miss Levy made the only closing argument for the State. She asked the death penalty. After Miss Levy's plea, Judge Alford instructed the jury which then retired to deliberate. The jury was only out thirty minutes. This is one of the quickest verdicts ever rendered in a murder case, according to Stark.

When the trial opened Tuesday, Miss Levy took an active part in selection of the jurors. Although Miss Levy has had considerable experience in civil cases, she has not had many criminal ones in Criminal Court. However, Miss Levy has defended in several criminal cases outside of Marion County.
