OLD TIME PROPOSALS SHOCK MODERN DADS

"May I have the honor of your daughter's hand in marriage?" would probably startle most present-day fathers out a full week's sleep.

Because daughter is the final decision—not father's. And that, boys, is because it is really an honor in this day and age when a girl seriously accepts a man's proposal. She doesn't have to, for money's sake. She can earn her own, and in many cases makes as much or more than the man who loves her. But in the long ago, when a man went through all the agony of getting down on his bended knee to say a long rigamarole of "having the honor" etc., no doubt milady had been praying day and night for the proposal, for fear she would be left an "old maid" without a chance to get a meal ticket, and the "honor" was really all hers.

To get daughter safely married before that old maid age set in so grimly used to be father's steadiest task, and he generally jumped headlong at the first honest proposal that came daughter's way whether she wanted it or not. So if your girl accepts you, you know she means it.

Man Proposes

Dear Miss Lee: I am a young man 21 years of age. For over two years I have loved a girl of 22 years. Does one year make a difference in a girl's age?

Last night she came to me. I waited for her. She promises to meet me, but I wait for her. But I decided to tell her now. If she loves me, which she says she does, she will phone or write me. Am I not right? She is an orphan girl. She is alone.

WONDERING.

No, I don't think it will pay to run after her. In the first place she will not make a good wife if she is not ready to settle down. Would she make a good wife? I draw a good salary, and am ready to settle down. How was your father? Does it pay to run after her? She is a regular girl.

WONDERING.

Save your checkels, and some day they'll come in handy when you want to put the first installment down on a house. About the only thing that might get the "rough rowdy" out of her system would be a disagreeable shock-like finding you were engaged to someone else, or having an unpleasant and lasting memory about her roughness.
