Her Own Way

A STORY OF A GIRL OF TODAY

"I haven't a relative in the city," I answered. Until now I had not sounded the depths of my condition. In my despair I was about to ask the woman if she would loan me enough money to telegraph my father, when I heard another voice at the door asking for me. The attendant said:

"They want you, miss." Not knowing who "they" were and scarcely caring, I went forward. It seemed to me that nothing could be worse than what I had already experienced in the last half hour, but worse was to come. I found the waiter and a man with a peculiarly hard countenance, standing just outside the woman's dressing room.

"The waiter seems to think you were ill, miss. Can we be of any service to you?" "I am not ill, but I've lost all my money."

The waiter held out the bill for my dinner to the man. He scrutinized it carefully and then looked at me searchingly.

"You may use the house phone to telephone your friends," he offered. "I have no friends here. I am alone in the city."

The man looked me over again appraisingly.

"I'll take you to the manager," he said.

Although I was terrified as I had never been before, I could not help noting that as we walked through the dining room to the office, we attracted much attention, but it was not until I had faced the manager and realized that I had been following a detective attached to the restaurant, that I understood why the people looked at me.

Clement Sterns, as I learned his name later, was an unknown type of man to me. He seemed to think that a young, unprotected woman was a legitimate object of his attention. I felt myself trembling and turning alternately white and red before his narrowed eyes.

"So, you've been trying to beat the restaurant," were his first words. "I beg your pardon?"

"Well, you came in here and ordered an expensive dinner for which you cannot pay."

"No, sir, I cannot," I answered. "I thought I had $250 in bills in my bag when I came in and only discovered that the bag was gone while the waiter was out for my ice cream."

Martha Lee's Column

Gossip Vs. News

Dear Miss Lee: Please tell me why what news a woman hears and tells is called gossip, and what news a man hears and tells is called "news." I read in a recent issue of the Times where a certain man had advocated "ducking" for gossiping. Why should the women's tongues off if they are not to talk with the same as a man's tongue is?

Gossip is malicious repetition of slander. News is interesting facts. The judge in the story to which you refer advocated ducking for both men and women gossipers, if I remember rightly, so I'm afraid you are hitting a little wide of the mark. The story was news—the reason for the judge's decision was gossip. Moral: Don't gossip.

About Sandy

Dear Miss Lee: Can you tell me whether I can get the story of "Sandy" and where and what the price? I can't wait until I can read it all. Is the "Tangle" ended? That was sure a good one.

A STORY LOVER.

"Sandy" is not out in book form yet. The "Tangle" is ended. "Her Own Way" is running in place of the "Tangle" now.

How to stop BOILS!

There's only one way to stop boils. Stop the cause of boils! That's common sense—Isn't it? All right. Boils thrive because the blood gets so weak in healthy, red cells that it can't throw off the impurities that get into the body. There's not enough rich, red blood to purify the system.

Now—S. S. S. builds back the blood to fighting strength. S. S. S. builds red blood cells—builds them by the millions! Boils dry up!

S. S. S. is the thing. Impurities that cause boils and other skin eruptions can't stand up against the rich, healthy, red blood that S. S. S. builds. That's all there is to it.

Stop boils with S. S. S. It's the way. Get it, any druggist. The larger bottle is more economical.
