Martha Lee's Column

Girls Try Too Hard

Dear Martha Lee: Just what is your opinion of the girls of today? Do you think they are any better than those of a few years back? Personally, I don't. For one thing, I feel that the girls of today are trying too hard to be perfect. They are trying to catch up with the fellows, and they are trying to be just like them. They are trying to be just like the fellows, and they are trying to be just like them. They are trying to be just like the fellows, and they are trying to be just like them.

You are quite, quite right, Doc. Too right, very nearly. All this attempt at modernism seems to have deprived the girls of coquetry and charm. They want to blurt out their love and chase after the man as though he were a prize hare about to escape. If he doesn't show interest in them after the first five minutes of conversation, they think all is lost, and the man with it. They take love too seriously and go in for a man hunt as though their lives depended on it. To be successful they should be more particular and less desperate. Honey catches more flies than vinegar.

Her Own Way

A STORY OF A GIRL OF TODAY

SOME ADVICE

I started right in to do what Mamie had told me and for two or three minutes I was very busy checking hats and entirely too nervous to look about or listen to what anyone said. At last I heard someone say:

"Hello, cutie, when did you blow in? I'm sure I've never seen you here before, but I might have known you'd be here, for Zigfeld has nothing on Sterns when it comes to picking beautiful girls."

I tried to smile but my lips were frozen.

Then I looked at Mamie wondering. How could she have kept so sweet and full of good humor when all day she was target for the tawdry compliments that any man might see fit to give her? I was learning very rapidly that most men seem to think that with a compliment or two while showing an inclination to be a good spender, any man may make a conquest of a working girl. I found out that night that man never looks upon woman impersonally. She is never just a human being like himself. She is either his mother, his wife, his sister, a prospective romance or flirtation or the woman who does not count.

It had never occurred to me before that girls in business life had to put up with such things. Consequently I made a little sound of fear, as another would be flattered, tried to touch my hand as I held it out for his hat.

Mamie came forward, saying under her breath:

"Just act as though you didn't see it. It's nothing, my dear, after you get used to it."

"Do you have much of this sort of thing to put up with?" I asked as there came a lull. I was making up my mind that it would not be as easy to get rid of these men as it had been to get rid of Chuck.

"Well, you have to stand it up to a certain point," broke in Mamie. "You can't make a man grouchy, for if you do he'll make a fuss to the management and you'll lose your job. But for your own sake you can't give him too much encouragement. You'll soon learn to have an answer ready that will make any man keep his distance without making him mad; that is, if you stay. But I don't think you'll stick. Somehow you don't seem to fit in."

"I'm sure you don't seem to fit in," said a loud voice. "Sterns tells me, little one, that you've been playing in hard luck. Never let it be said that I neglected beauty in distress," and turning his hat over, another customer dropped a bill in it and passed it to me.

For a moment I was thunderstruck. I didn't know what to do. I looked at Mamie in distress and like the brick she was she answered my S.O.S. (Copyright, 1926, NEA Service, Inc.) NEXT: Enemy and friend.
