Mrs. White, through her membership, will have access to the clubhouse while in New York, and can issue guest cards to Indiana business women sojourning in the East.

THE INDIANAPOLIS TIMES

CHURCH CRISIS IN MEXICO EXPLAINED

Study There Shows Government Is Not Warring on Religious Activities, but Political Instead.

The following is the first of three articles on the present Mexican situation by Robert W. Shantz, General Director of the Times-Herald Newspapers, who has just completed a Mexican trip.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, March 8.—The great problem in Mexico today has to do with educating and putting to work on something better than a peasant basis from eight to ten million illiterate and superstitious people of Indian extraction.

This work is being attempted by an apparently sincere labor government, supported on the one hand by organized labor and on the other by General Obregon and the army.

The Opposition

The government is opposed first by organized native and foreign capital, up in arms against the improved status of the laborer, and especially against the breaking up, through condemnation proceedings, of large land holdings. Second, by the organized Catholic church.

The present constitutional status of churches and other church property in Mexico, including schools, is that the buildings belong to the government and are loaned by the government to the church. This has been law since 1917.

Provisions barring foreign priests from preaching and teaching in Mexico have been included in Mexican constitutions for more than half a century although they have not always been enforced.

Church Politics

In the eyes of the present Mexican government the foreign priest is generally looked upon as an anti-government agitator and the government's laws to regulate and deport him are comparative to the United States laws regulating and deporting foreign agitators. As a matter of fact it is the Catholic Church not as a religious, but as a political institution that the government is shooting at in deportation and similar proceedings. Foreign Protestant ministers preach as they please to foreign congregations in Mexico City and elsewhere throughout the republic.

For our government to attempt to make an international question out of the rights of the Mexican government to deal as it will according to its own constitution with foreign or other Catholic institutions would be unwarranted interference with international Mexican politics and law making powers, considering the long establishment of Mexican constitutional laws on this subject. At this late date any such attempt would put us in a ridiculous position.

Practically any such attempt would be cloud the real issue between this country and Mexico that of retroactive and allegedly confiscatory condemnation of "ouster" laws affecting land and other American owned property in Mexico. Raising the religious issues would be playing right into the hands of the Mexican government which is chiefly interested in the land laws.

New York State grew nearly 47,000,000 bushels of potatoes in 1924.
