Now Phyllis Has Rosy Cheeks

I always liked Phyllis and I felt sorry for her. She never had many good times. Just pale and "washed out looking." Just pale. Never went in for sports like the rest of us. But now, why, I never saw such a change! I hardly knew her. She had gained five pounds. She'd been playing tennis and, honestly, she looked glad to be alive!

"What have you done to yourself?" I demanded. "Lydia E. Plunkham's eggplant?" I asked. "I'm not. I'm also taking the pills for constipation. Better try them yourself."

MINER, TRAPPED 10 HOURS, SAVED

Got Hungry and Thought of Floyd Collins.

IRON RIVER, Mich., April 26.—Imprisoned for ten hours behind a wall of debris, following a cave-in at the Jones Laughlin coal mine near here, Felix Norman has been brought out alive.

"I got pretty hungry, but outside of that it wasn't so bad," Norman said. "I could hear the boys working toward me, and I knew they'd get there before I starved to death."

Norman was kept alive by air which surface workers pumped down into the cavity where he was entombed.

Norman said he thought of Floyd Collins, the man who died of exposure in Sand Cave, Ky., while hundreds of rescue workers were attempting to reach him.

"I didn't think much about Collins much though," Norman said. "I kept pretty busy digging away at my side of the rock wall."

Matt Corsoni, who was with Norman in the portion of the mine where the cave-in occurred, was killed by falling rock and earth. Miners recovered his body while chopping through the wall to release Norman.

THE INDIANAPOLIS TIMES

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH TO ASK FOR MINISTERS

Young People to Be Asked to Study for the Ministry.

Presbyterian churches will be specially urged by the Presbyterian Board of Christian Education on May 2 to bring to the attention of young people of the church the need for more ministers.

The denomination now has vacant over 2,000 churches, according to a statement made today by Rev. William Chalmers Covert, D.D., general secretary of the board, from his offices in the Witherspoon Bldg., Philadelphia. Upward of 400 of these offer an average salary of $2,000.

Perhaps 1,500 of the vacant churches are too small to support a pastor, but could be combined with neighboring churches so as to be cared for by 500 additional ministers. These ministers are not available.

Each Presbyterian church will be asked to attempt to secure the promise of one young man to study for the ministry, and members of the same churches will be asked to underwrite the expense of maintaining students during the college and seminary days, if such support is necessary for them.

According to Rev. Lewis B. Hills, D.D., secretary in charge of student aid, the Presbyterian Church each year, through its board of Christian education, invests $100,000 or more in the education of young men for the ministry.

"During the past year," said Dr. Hills, "the board has been under the necessity of reducing the amount of money invested in students because of the financial situation of the board. It has been unfortunate that the reduction in support of this work has come at the time when the church badly needs additional ministers. The situation for the future is really serious. The number of students in the twelve theological seminaries has not kept pace with the growth of membership in the Presbyterian church. As a result, the denomination has been forced to draw on other denominations in order to fill Presbyterian pulpits."

According to the records kept in the Witherspoon Bldg., Philadelphia, by the Presbyterian board of Christian education, Presbyterian ministers have been dying faster than they have been ordained during the last five years.

Previous to 1920, ministers were ordained in sufficient numbers to replace the gaps caused by death of aged preachers. Unless additional students for the ministry are discovered, the situation fifteen years from now in the Presbyterian denomination will be serious, according to officers of the board of Christian education.
