Her Own Way A STORY OF A GIRL OF TODAY

"HE DIDN'T MEAN IT"

"I got along splendidly at Morton, Mr. Hathaway, thanks to you," I answered his question.

"You've nothing to thank me for, Miss Dean."

"Yes, I have. You see I gave your name as a reference and it worked so well that I worked all morning."

"Have you girls had your lunch?"

"Yes, indeed, and I must go right back and punch that old time clock."

As Mamie and I started out, Mr. Hathaway held me back for a moment and told me that Jerry had been making an awful fuss about what had happened to me the day before.

"One would have thought, my dear, to hear Jerry talk, that you were in danger of being murdered."

"Well, I got this anyway," and I pulled my dress away and showed him the red mark that was still about my throat.

"My God, girl, did they choke you like that?"

"Yes."

"Jerry should never have given you that expensive bag, and having accepted it you should not have carried it every day. By the way, let me give you a little advice, Miss Dean. Of course, you know that you are a very pretty girl, and my son is a very susceptible as well as a very impetuous young man. But being young his ardor cools as quickly as his heat. If you want real happiness you should allow some older man to plot you about."

"I don't think you are very nice, Mr. Hathaway, to say such things about your own son. I am very fond of Jerry. He has asked me to marry him, and maybe I will."

"Jerry has asked you to marry him?"

"Yes. Is there anything strange about that?"

"Only that I am sure he doesn't mean it—Oh, you need not try to stop me," he said rapidly as I held up my hand. "I'd say it of any man, my dear, that I thought was playing fast and loose with you. Sometime I will explain myself further."

I didn't dare to raise my eyes. I just sped out the door. I stopped a moment to talk with Mamie about my room. The moment I mentioned it she said: "You mustn't think of going away from me, I must have someone to talk to, and I'll tell mother that if she doesn't act all right with you I'll run away with Buddy Tremaine. Come back tonight as though nothing had happened."

Martha Lee Says WHEN A MAN'S A MAN HE PLAYS THE GAME

"A man's and man for a 'that and a' that." And no gentleman is going to take advantage, even when a silly, and thoughtless girl gives him the opportunity.

The idea of a young man baiting a girl with bantering talk to see if she is so foolish or so stupid as to let him follow up his advantage by talk she doesn't mean herself, is intensely repulsive. Yet a great many young men think they are thus licensed. They leave the ultimate decision to the girl; if she accepts their half-veiled insinuations and rotten "modern" talk, she's "fast," and they feel at liberty to pursue her. If she doesn't, she's probably "nice," but slow. Many a girl has earned herself a reputation she wouldn't exactly covet because she felt that she was being a poor sport to ignore the conversational openings the malicious young men were giving her. A girl has to be pretty clever to be popular these days, and yet not "fast" or "vulgar" or rotten.

A. H. C.

Nuff said!

A Young Man's Fancy

Miss Martha Lee: What is your opinion of the youth of today? Do you think the modern young men direct their actions according to the kind of company they are in? Why will the average young man not respect the girl with whom he is acquainted? Will he, if he really cares for the girl, talk indecent while her company is present?

My opinion of the youth of today is that they are honest at the core, desirous of being wise and good, but they are like slightly burned and mushy potatoes—overdone. I certainly do think young men direct their actions according to the company they are in. And most of the young men deliberately bait the "company" they are in to find out just exactly how far they may go. The average young man may not respect the girl he keeps company with, because the average girl doesn't know how to be self-consciously make a man keep his place, and yet be jolly and interesting and delightful company. It is only the self-conscious and ill-bred boy, wishing to make an impression of "ultra-modernism" who will talk indecently in the presence of a girl—any girl whether he cares for her or not.

A Question of Religion

Dear Martha Lee: I have a girl friend who is going with a fellow who is a Catholic, and she is a Protestant. He wants her to marry him, and if she does what are they supposed to do? Is it her place to turn Catholic for him? Or is it his place to turn Protestant for her? We have argued over that, and I would like for you to answer me. I said if she liked him well enough, she would as he wanted her to do. If not, she should advise him.

A PATIENT READER

If they are going to marry they will have to be bigger than they are their respective religions. I believe it is customary for a Catholic to remain a Catholic and the Protestant to turn Catholic, or else the Catholic will be severed from his church. If she will consent to turn Catholic, or at least consent to bring up their children as Catholics, the marriage will be sanctioned by the Catholic church. Religion sometimes makes a big rift in the lives of married people, so tell her to weigh the matter carefully before she goes into the marriage.

Fellow-Sufferer

Dear Martha Lee: Please publish this so that R. F. S. may see it. To R. F. S.: I have had the same thing happen to me and I also wrote to Martha. I had a letter, too—still have—but I don't show

Breakfast—Stewed figs, cereal, thin cream, waffles, syrup, milk, coffee.

Luncheon—Scalloped cheese, hearts of lettuce with French dressing, rye bread, canned pears, sponge drops, milk, tea.

Dinner—Shoulder of lamb, buttered rice, parsnip patties, grape fruit salad, whole wheat bread, banana snow, milk, coffee.

The shoulder of lamb should be boned by the butcher. Roll and tie firmly when ready to roast. A dressing made of bread can be used before rolling the meat and if a little meat is wanted to go a long way the dressing or stuffing helps out materially.

Scalloped Cheese

Four slices bread, 2 eggs, 1 1/2 cups milk, 1/4 teaspoon mustard, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1/2 cup diced cheese, paprika, butter.

The bread should be cut about 3/4 of an inch thick. Spread generously with butter and cut each slice into small squares, making cubes of bread buttered on one side. Put half the bread buttered side down into a baking dish, cover with cheese and add the remaining bread, butter side up. Mix salt, mustard and paprika with eggs and beat well. Beat in milk and pour mixture over bread and cheese in baking dish. Press the top layer of bread down to become covered with milk mixture.

Let stand for ten minutes before baking. Bake forty minutes in a moderate oven. Increase the heat for the last few minutes of baking to brown the top. Serve in the baking dish.
