

COFFIN'S DEEDS MAY COST VOTES IN SENATE RACE

Securing of State Appointments Complicates Fortunes of Robinson.

While Senator James E. Watson straightens out the tangles that have arisen in the Republican State women's organization, the political fortunes of his colleague, Senator Arthur R. Robinson, are not entirely without complications, the politicians are saying.

Robinson's campaign, according to insiders, is suffering from past victories of George V. Coffin, G. O. P. county chairman, in obtaining State appointments for friends from Governor Jackson.

Grudges are being nursed by a number of county chairmen who recommended men for State positions, only to find that Coffin had closed the deals for his own friends.

Hold Responsible

Robinson, whose greatest strength is the powerful support of the Coffin machine, is said to be held responsible for the deeds of his political backer.

Fifth Congressional District Republican leaders are said to be particularly lukewarm to the Robinson candidacy because of Jackson's failure to give State jobs to a number of reliable chieftains.

In this district, which includes Terre Haute, Brazil and other centers, Arch. G. Graham, South Bend attorney, polled a formidable total of votes during his primary campaign against Robinson.

Governor Joins Senators

Had Governor Jackson remained cold to the two Indiana Senators as he was during the primary, the observers believe there would have been less likelihood of Robinson being held responsible for the situation, but Jackson now is sleeping in the same political bed with the two Senators.

The opportunity for Jackson to inject State administration accomplishments as an issue in the campaign apparently outweighed his ruffled feelings—disturbed when Robinson, the man he appointed to succeed Samuel M. Raynor, and Watson yielded to the Klan and voted against the World Court.

With Ora Davies, Kokomo, Robinson's primary campaign manager, considered as a candidate for the gubernatorial nomination, the embarrassments that Senator Watson is suffering from premature scrambles in that race may soon fall in Robinson's direction, it is believed.

How to Swim—No. 20

By Lillian Cannon
A very important point in the back stroke is the coast. The movement of the legs and arms should be simultaneous so that the maximum of headway can be attained.

Then at the end of the stroke one keeps the body straight and lets the impetus gained drive one through the water until it is expended.

It will take some practice to get the most out of the coast, but it is very necessary that one get into the habit of making his strokes and kicks vigorously and at the same time, and then straighten out and let the body slip through the water until the impetus is gone.

For there will come the resting periods.
