Her Own Way. A Story of a Girl of Today

JUDY LOOKS AHEAD

I looked across the table at Joan and saw that her face was trans- figured and I understood that she, too, had the great thrill and that her love had always contained that feel- ing of maternal responsibility with- out which any woman's love was dross.

I knew instinctively that what she had just passed through had broad- ened and deepened her character, and that now that Barry was gone there would come to her some time in the near future, when the hurt was but a scar, the knowledge that after all he had only been a way- ward boy—a body who had perhaps loved her as much as he was capable. One who had not really meant to make her unhappy, but one of those weakling human beings whose first thought was of the bringing to him- self that which he wanted at what- ever cost.

Because she had had that mother feeling I knew that she would for- give him and come to look upon his wife and his child as something which he had given her to pet and care for.

It was her great mother tenderness which poured itself out on something unworthy, and I prayed a little prayer, "God grant that Lela and the child would make up to this poor little rich girl for her poverty in love."

I was glad that Joan was young, for I was sure that this episode would only broaden and sweeten her life in the end, that she would make some other man a better wife and bring up his children to more splen- did maturity.

I looked at Jerry. Was it the trick of the candle light, or had the faint drawn lines really ironed themselves out of his face in which I only saw pathetic appeal. My hand stole over and rested on that one of his which was lying listlessly on the table.

"Come," I said, "let us all go back to the city and try and sleep away all our cares because tomorrow, you know, is another day. Another day which promises to be full of responsi- ble undertakings."

"Where do you learn all this?" asked Joan. "One to look at you would think that you thought of nothing else than having a good time. And yet in the few days that I have known you I have learned from a girl of about my own age and of my own understanding more than I have learned all together in the years that have gone before."

"Have you also loved and lost?" she said as she looked at me quizzically.

"I don't know, Joan," I said hon- estly, "whether I have ever loved or not. If it is a sudden passion that makes one feel that one cannot live separated from the other, I have never loved. And not having loved, I cannot have a feeling that I have lost."

Jerry dropped my hand, and rising we all went down the piazza steps out into the moonlight garden.

DON'T LET YOUR MENTAL FURNITURE BE WRECKED

Odd isn't it, how we sometimes let other persons' pessimistic or mistaken opinions, take root in our minds and crowd out the peace and happiness that should be ours?

The woman who wouldn't think of allowing her neighbor to come into the living room and tumble the furniture about; who wouldn't dream of letting her pull down the pretty draperies from the windows and chuck them into the attic or bring dirty, rickety furniture into the pretty brightness of sunny, clean rooms, will yet let that neighbor tumble her peace of mind into a heap, tear asunder the happy little domestic dreams; set ugly unwhole- some thoughts into her mental par- lor.

Housecleaning Time

Dear Martha Lee: I am a young mar- ried woman, only 25, and I'm terribly worried because there's something about my husband that I don't like. He's just what you call a "blue-eyed devil." He's all men cheats? And they just waiting for a date with another woman be- sides their wives?

My husband and I get along all right. That is, we do until lately. Then I got real intimately acquainted with another young married woman, and she tells me that she's had a real shock. She says they are all alike and simply can't be true by their very nature.

Now, I'm beginning to doubt my hus- band. Even when he says that he is just going to the store, I'm wondering if he is telling me the truth and hasn't made a date with another girl. It makes him awfully mad when I ask him anything like that. He says he wouldn't dream of being interested in another woman, but my help friends say they all talk that way. I don't have to do any dishing, I've lost fifteen pounds since spring worrying for love him. Do you think he's like other men, and are they all cheats?

Be quick, little new wife, and jump into a mental house cleaning. You've no time to lose. You've let your woman friend bring in about all the dirty mental furniture that you can stand, but if you get busy, you can be happy and peaceful again in no time. If I were you, I should drop her acquaintance. Any- way, positively refuse to let her talk on this subject about which she has distorted views. Certainly men are not all cheats. Far from it. The average married man is too busy producing bread and butter to give much thought to sowing wild oats. Exceptions there are, of course, but truly, the woman who makes such a statement as "All men are cheats" is to be pitied. She indicates that she has had only one kind of men acquaintances. Let her spoil your domestic happiness.

Vacation Needed

Dear Martha Lee: I've been married two years and haven't been home to see my mother and folks, who live in another state, because I'm afraid to leave my hus- band. I would have to stay about a month if I went as far as Minneapolis.
