

NEW ORCHESTRAS TO PLAY AT CLUB

Programs Will Be Broadcast
By WFBM.

The new orchestras soon will be broadcasting over WFBM, Merchants Heat and Light Company, from the Indianapolis Athletic Club.

The Indianapolis Athletic Club Ensemble, George Irish, director, will open the season's engagement of the evening at 6:30 p. m. Members of the orchestra are: George Irish, director and pianist; Otis Igelman, violin; Gilbert Dutton, saxophone and clarinet; Galt Stout, saxophones and clarinet; Dolly Gray, banjo; Paul Waldorf, tuba, and Larry Gommerding, drums, tympani and marimba. As a general rule, concert music will be played the first half hour of each dinner session and dance music the remainder.

On Friday evening, Sept. 17, at 10:30 p. m., the Indianapolis Athletic Club Orchestra of eleven men, will open the season of after theater dancing. The orchestra includes the members of the ensemble with the addition of four men who play trombone, two trumpets and another saxophone, giving an ideal instrumentation for playing modern dance music. There will be after-theater dancing at the club each Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evening.

STUDIO IS REDECORATED

Improvements Made to Put Better
Times Programs on Air.

The Indianapolis Times studio, located in the Severin, from which The Times programs go on the air every Friday night, has been remodeled, new drapes hung and several loud speakers have been installed in the lobby of the hotel, connected to the broadcasting line, so that guests of the hotel may enjoy the program as they are broadcast.

The new studio is large enough to accommodate the large orchestras and bands. Listeners who tune in on The Times programs this season will note a wonderful improvement in the quality of the programs.

CIRCLE ON AIR AGAIN

Two Weekly Programs On Schedule for Winter Months.

The Circle Theater again will present two programs weekly from the local station. Manager Ace Berry of the Circle announces that they have obtained the same hours from WFBM that were used last season. The Circle Theater Concert Orchestra and associate artists will be presented on Monday evenings between 7 to 8 and Miss Degas Byrd, organist, will entertain on Friday evening starting at 11 o'clock with her popular request organ program.

GREGORIZERS TUESDAY

Favorites Again to Be Heard From 9:30 to 10:30 P. M.

The "Goodness Gracious Gregorizers" and the "Voice of Gold," old time favorites with the radio audience of WFBM, will again appear over the local station each Tuesday evening between 9:30 and 10:30 from the Severin studio. This program, sponsored by Gregg & Son Cleaners, proved to be one of the most popular programs presented from WFBM last year.

Gone, but Not Forgotten

Wesley Burkhead, 1004 N. New Jersey St., Chevrolet, 559-848, from Ohio St. and Senate Ave.

Eugene H. Daniels, 5442 University Ave., Chevrolet, 23030, from Meridian St.

Helen Weidel, 57 N. Fall Creek Blvd., Ford, 558-287, from rear of house.

Dwight Clark, Nashville, Ind., Ford, from Capitol Ave., between Washington and Market ts.

Greenville Edison, Kokomo, Ind., Ford, 373-299, Georgia and Illinois Sts.

Leonard P. Jones, Bloomington, Ind., Chevrolet, Meridian and Georgia Sts.

Morris E. George, 2325 Shelby St., Chevrolet, Fountain Square.

BEER FOR BEETLES
LONDON.—When it was reported at a meeting of the Bedwas (Monmouthshire) council that the township of Trethomas was overrun with black beetles, the medical officer advised that a good way of trapping the beetles was to place a bowl of beer in the kitchen every night.

Hello Children!!

The Indianapolis Agency will again broadcast stories, games, and songs every Monday, Wednesday and Friday evening from 6 to 6:30.

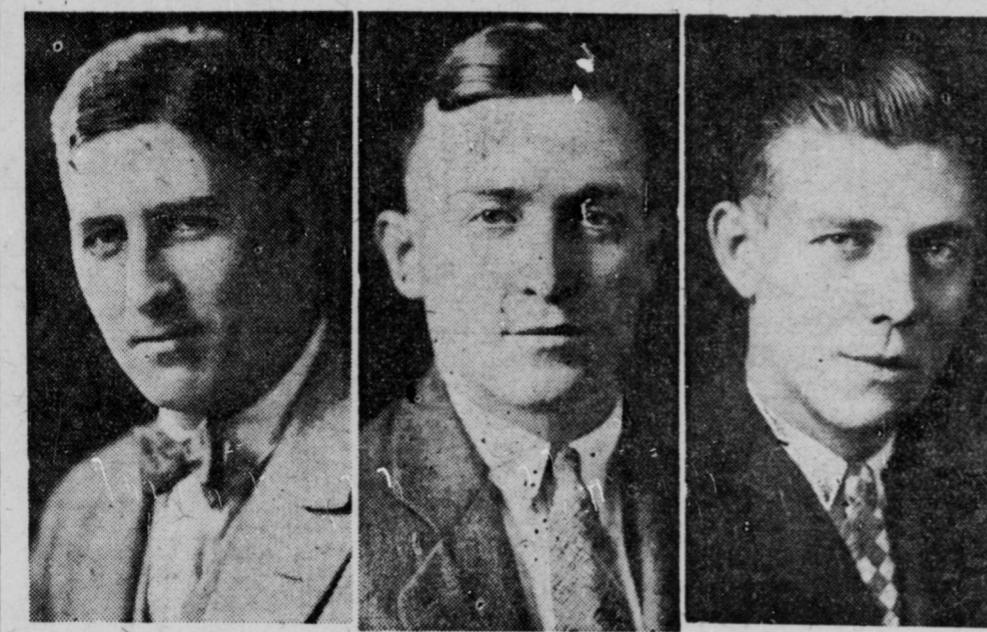

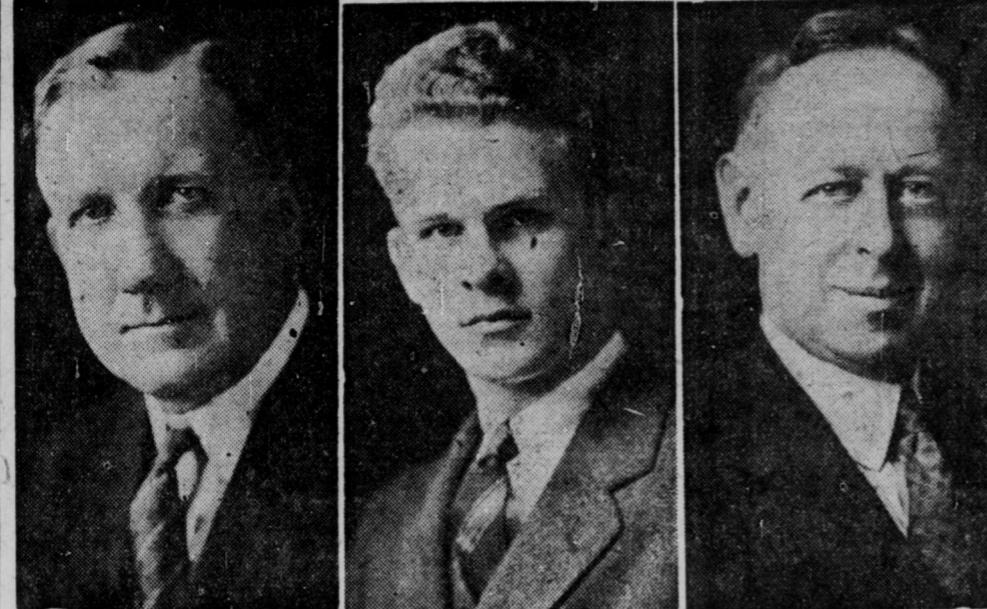

Yes! "Aunt Sarah" will tell the stories, "Uncle Ralph" the games.

"Uncle" Ralph Colby, Mgr.
Indianapolis Agency

FRANKLIN Life Ins. Co.

706-707 National City Bank Bldg.

The Men Behind WFBM

Left to right, top row: Tom C. Poll, director of radio activities, of WFBM radio station at the Merchants Heat and Light Company; Robert T. Miller, program director, Blythe Q. Hendricks, publicity director of the Merchants Heat and Light Company. Bottom Row, left to right: Hobart D. Ashlock, chief radio engineer, and William C. Ehlers, station operator.

PRESIDENT GREEN SENDS GREETINGS

American Labor Head Urges Continuance of Organization Campaign.

By William Green,
President, American Federation of Labor. (Written for NEA Service and The Times.)

Two issues of far-reaching importance should be emphasized Labor day:

They are:

1. An intensive trade union organization campaign.

2. The non-partisan political campaign of the American Federation of Labor.

Wherever Labor day is celebrated, and from reports this will be almost universal, agitation should be renewed for a vigorous continuance of the campaign to organize every wage earner eligible to membership in a trade union.

Speakers at Labor day demonstrations would do well to urge every member of a trade union to appoint himself a committee of one to seek new members.

Unions that have adopted this policy have gained in membership. Members of unions who have relied upon the officers alone to accomplish results have not been so successful.

The present stable conditions enjoyed by the organized wage earners of America were not voluntarily conceded by employers. They are the result of organization, of years of struggle and sacrifice, until collective bargaining became the recognized vehicle through which it was possible to maintain industrial peace.

No reason can be advanced why every union should not be 100 per cent organized. It all depends upon the willingness of the members to perform their share of organization work.

The importance of selecting members of Congress who will be true to their constituents and to the people generally cannot be overestimated.

There is hardly a congressional district in the United States in which the voters cannot nominate and elect a forward-looking representative. It is doubtful if there is a state in which a senator cannot be nominated and elected who will be true to the people. The only obstacle will be the failure of the wage earners to vote for the most acceptable candidates.

Labor also should be warned that the conspiracy to repeat direct primary laws will be fatal to the nomination of friendly candidates.

It is my hope that every wage earner will faithfully register and vote in the November election. But these votes must be cast for candidates who will be loyal to the people. If loyal to the people they will be loyal to labor, as labor never asks for anything that is not good for the people generally.

Therefore let us all declare that we will launch an organization campaign this Labor day greater than that of any previous year and that we will vote for candidates that we know will be faithful to the wishes of labor and the people.

(Copyright, 1926, NEA Service, Inc.)

Members of the House of Representatives should be elected who will refuse to permit "ree men to dictate what shall be considered and voted on. It is a dictatorship repugnant to our democratic institutions and those responsible.

Speakers at Labor day demonstrations would do well to urge every member of a trade union to appoint himself a committee of one to seek new members.

Unions that have adopted this policy have gained in membership. Members of unions who have relied upon the officers alone to accomplish results have not been so successful.

The present stable conditions enjoyed by the organized wage earners of America were not voluntarily conceded by employers. They are the result of organization, of years of struggle and sacrifice, until collective bargaining became the recognized vehicle through which it was possible to maintain industrial peace.

No reason can be advanced why every union should not be 100 per cent organized. It all depends upon the willingness of the members to perform their share of organization work.

The importance of selecting members of Congress who will be true to their constituents and to the people generally cannot be overestimated.

There is hardly a congressional district in the United States in which the voters cannot nominate and elect a forward-looking representative. It is doubtful if there is a state in which a senator cannot be nominated and elected who will be true to the people. The only obstacle will be the failure of the wage earners to vote for the most acceptable candidates.

Labor also should be warned that the conspiracy to repeat direct primary laws will be fatal to the nomination of friendly candidates.

It is my hope that every wage earner will faithfully register and vote in the November election. But these votes must be cast for candidates who will be loyal to the people. If loyal to the people they will be loyal to labor, as labor never asks for anything that is not good for the people generally.

Therefore let us all declare that we will launch an organization campaign this Labor day greater than that of any previous year and that we will vote for candidates that we know will be faithful to the wishes of labor and the people.

(Copyright, 1926, NEA Service, Inc.)

Members of the House of Representatives should be elected who will refuse to permit "ree men to dictate what shall be considered and voted on. It is a dictatorship repugnant to our democratic institutions and those responsible.

Speakers at Labor day demonstrations would do well to urge every member of a trade union to appoint himself a committee of one to seek new members.

Unions that have adopted this policy have gained in membership. Members of unions who have relied upon the officers alone to accomplish results have not been so successful.

The present stable conditions enjoyed by the organized wage earners of America were not voluntarily conceded by employers. They are the result of organization, of years of struggle and sacrifice, until collective bargaining became the recognized vehicle through which it was possible to maintain industrial peace.

No reason can be advanced why every union should not be 100 per cent organized. It all depends upon the willingness of the members to perform their share of organization work.

The importance of selecting members of Congress who will be true to their constituents and to the people generally cannot be overestimated.

There is hardly a congressional district in the United States in which the voters cannot nominate and elect a forward-looking representative. It is doubtful if there is a state in which a senator cannot be nominated and elected who will be true to the people. The only obstacle will be the failure of the wage earners to vote for the most acceptable candidates.

Labor also should be warned that the conspiracy to repeat direct primary laws will be fatal to the nomination of friendly candidates.

It is my hope that every wage earner will faithfully register and vote in the November election. But these votes must be cast for candidates who will be loyal to the people. If loyal to the people they will be loyal to labor, as labor never asks for anything that is not good for the people generally.

Therefore let us all declare that we will launch an organization campaign this Labor day greater than that of any previous year and that we will vote for candidates that we know will be faithful to the wishes of labor and the people.

(Copyright, 1926, NEA Service, Inc.)

Members of the House of Representatives should be elected who will refuse to permit "ree men to dictate what shall be considered and voted on. It is a dictatorship repugnant to our democratic institutions and those responsible.

Speakers at Labor day demonstrations would do well to urge every member of a trade union to appoint himself a committee of one to seek new members.

Unions that have adopted this policy have gained in membership. Members of unions who have relied upon the officers alone to accomplish results have not been so successful.

The present stable conditions enjoyed by the organized wage earners of America were not voluntarily conceded by employers. They are the result of organization, of years of struggle and sacrifice, until collective bargaining became the recognized vehicle through which it was possible to maintain industrial peace.

No reason can be advanced why every union should not be 100 per cent organized. It all depends upon the willingness of the members to perform their share of organization work.

The importance of selecting members of Congress who will be true to their constituents and to the people generally cannot be overestimated.

There is hardly a congressional district in the United States in which the voters cannot nominate and elect a forward-looking representative. It is doubtful if there is a state in which a senator cannot be nominated and elected who will be true to the people. The only obstacle will be the failure of the wage earners to vote for the most acceptable candidates.

Labor also should be warned that the conspiracy to repeat direct primary laws will be fatal to the nomination of friendly candidates.

It is my hope that every wage earner will faithfully register and vote in the November election. But these votes must be cast for candidates who will be loyal to the people. If loyal to the people they will be loyal to labor, as labor never asks for anything that is not good for the people generally.

Therefore let us all declare that we will launch an organization campaign this Labor day greater than that of any previous year and that we will vote for candidates that we know will be faithful to the wishes of labor and the people.

(Copyright, 1926, NEA Service, Inc.)

Members of the House of Representatives should be elected who will refuse to permit "ree men to dictate what shall be considered and voted on. It is a dictatorship repugnant to our democratic institutions and those responsible.

Speakers at Labor day demonstrations would do well to urge every member of a trade union to appoint himself a committee of one to seek new members.

Unions that have adopted this policy have gained in membership. Members of unions who have relied upon the officers alone to accomplish results have not been so successful.

The present stable conditions enjoyed by the organized wage earners of America were not voluntarily conceded by employers. They are the result of organization, of years of struggle and sacrifice, until collective bargaining became the recognized vehicle through which it was possible to maintain industrial peace.

No reason can be advanced why every union should not be 100 per cent organized. It all depends upon the willingness of the members to perform their share of organization work.

The importance of selecting members of Congress who will be true to their constituents and to the people generally cannot be overestimated.

There is hardly a congressional district in the United States in which the voters cannot nominate and elect a forward-looking representative. It is doubtful if there is a state in which a senator cannot be nominated and elected who will be true to the people. The only obstacle will be the failure of the wage earners to vote for the most acceptable candidates.

Labor also should be warned that the conspiracy to repeat direct primary laws will be fatal to the nomination of friendly candidates.

It is my hope that every wage earner will faithfully register and vote in the November election. But these votes must be cast for candidates who will be loyal to the people. If loyal to the people they will be loyal to labor, as labor never asks for anything that is not good for the people generally.

Therefore let us all declare that we will launch an organization campaign this Labor day greater than that of any previous year and that we will vote for candidates that we know will be faithful to the wishes of labor and the people.

(Copyright, 1926, NEA Service, Inc.)

Members of the House of Representatives should be elected who will refuse to permit "ree men to dictate what shall be considered and voted on. It is a dictatorship repugnant to our democratic institutions and those responsible.

Speakers at Labor day demonstrations would do well to urge every member of a trade union to appoint himself a committee of one to seek new members.

Unions that have adopted this policy have gained in membership. Members of unions who have relied upon the officers alone to accomplish results have not been so successful.

The present stable conditions enjoyed by the organized wage earners of America were not voluntarily conceded by employers. They are the result of organization, of years of struggle and sacrifice, until collective bargaining became the recognized vehicle through which it was possible to maintain industrial peace.

No reason can be advanced why every union should not be 100 per cent organized. It all depends upon the willingness of the members to perform their share of organization work.

The importance of selecting members of Congress who will be true to their constituents and to the people generally cannot be overestimated.

There is hardly a congressional district in the United States in which the voters cannot nominate and elect a forward-looking representative. It is doubtful if there is a state in which a senator cannot be nominated and elected who will be true to the people. The only obstacle will be the failure of the wage earners to vote for the most acceptable candidates.

Labor also should be warned that the conspiracy to repeat direct primary laws will be fatal to the nomination of friendly candidates.

It is my hope that every wage earner will faithfully register and vote in the November election. But these votes must be cast for candidates who will be loyal to the people. If loyal to the people they will be loyal to labor, as labor never asks for anything that is not good for the people generally.

Therefore let us all declare that we will launch an organization campaign this Labor day greater than that of any previous year and that we will vote for candidates that we know will be faithful to the wishes of labor and the people.

(Copyright, 1926, NEA Service, Inc.)

Members of the House of Representatives should be elected who will refuse to permit "ree men to dictate what shall be considered and voted on. It is a dictatorship repugnant to our democratic institutions and those responsible.

Speakers at Labor day demonstrations would do well to urge every member of a trade union to appoint himself a committee of one to seek new members.

Unions that have adopted this policy have gained in membership. Members of unions