

EDITOR OF DAILY MAIL, DEBT PACT FOE, QUILTS POST

Thomas Marlowe England's Loudest Voice Opposing Funding Agreement.

By United Press
LONDON, Sept. 16.—England's loudest voice in opposition to the debt funding agreement with the United States apparently has been stilled by the resignation of Thomas Marlowe as editor of the Daily Mail, a position which he had held since 1899.

It was understood that Marlowe, who resigned Wednesday, would continue as chairman of the Associated Newspapers, Limited, which is the Northcliffe Press, now controlled by the late publisher's brother, Lord Rothermere.

In some quarters today, the resignation was connected with a series of incidents of last summer which began with a virulent attack by the Mail upon the United States. "Shylock," was the Mail's description of Uncle Sam, and it printed the word "usury" in its columns with the two first letters, "us," in larger type. Lord Rothermere subsequently repudiated this anti-American campaign.

Writing in the Sunday Pictorial, and other of his newspapers, Rothermere disassociated himself from the policy adopted by the Mail toward allied debts to the United States.

CROWD M. D. CLASSES

Total of 407 Enrolled Here and At Bloomington.

Indiana University School of Medicine classes were crowded with the opening of the fall semester Wednesday. There are 103 sophomores, 97 juniors and 87 seniors in the school here and 120 freshmen at Bloomington, a total of 407. No additional students can be admitted, it was said.

Enrollment in the Training School for Nurses is now 147. This is a larger number than can be well accommodated. It was said, but with early construction of the Ball nurses' home, and the Coleman woman's hospital assured, the training facilities will be increased.

'No Sick,' in Mexico Have Good Liquor

Three young Mexicans, being deported by the United States immigration department, expressed joy today over their return to Mexico because they can get "good drinks."

"No sick in Mexico," declared one of the trio, when asked how they fared under United States prohibition laws, at the office of United States Marshal Linus P. Meredith.

"Bootleg liquor makes one sick," they declared.

The department ordered deportation of the youths as undesirable aliens after they served a fourteen months reformatory term for a clothing theft at Hammond.

"We have all kinds of liquor in Mexico, and all you want," commented Leo Alba, who was handcuffed to Rudolph Ramirez.

Francisco Guerra, entertained deputy marshals by sketching profiles.
