Tidy, Curly Hair in Summer
By Edna Wallace Hopper

I use a hair dress which every girl and woman would delight to know, especially in summer. It keeps my hair wavy, fluffy, glossy, tidy. I never go to a hairdresser, never have a Marcel wave. I get all that curl and glow by using this dressing twice a week in my room. Great experts say this dressing is especially for me. It is not sticky or greasy. It quickly does to perfection all my hair needs to be beautiful, wavy and tidy.

Now all toilet counters supply the same dressing under the name Edna Wallace Hopper's Wave and Sheen. The price is 75c. My guarantee comes with each bottle, so you risk nothing by trying it. You will find it just what you want. It is one of the best helps I ever found to keep women looking nice.

THROUGH ADVICE OF NEIGHBOR

Woman Tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"A neighbor advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which she said helped her so much. So I bought a few bottles and tried it out. I sure helped me wonderfully. I felt much better. My work is no longer a dread to me. If I hear of any one who is troubled the way I was, I will gladly recommend the Vegetable Compound to them and I will answer any letters in regard to the same."—Mrs. Bertha Meacham, 910 Center St., Lansing, Mich.

"I had been sickly ever since I was fifteen years old. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I got so I could do all my housework and I am in good health."—Mrs. Marie K. Williams, Ketchikan, Alaska.

From Michigan to Alaska, from Maine to Oregon and from Connecticut to California letters are continually being written by grateful women recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The Compound is made from roots and herbs and has been in use for over fifty years.

Martha Lee's Column
She Does Not Love Him

Dear Martha Lee: I am bringing my troubles to you. I have been going with a fellow for a year and a half. He is 22 and I'm 19. From the time I met him, I didn't want to go with him as he was bragged to another girl. However, she made the engagement, and he then told me that he loved me and wanted me to be his wife. I refused him, but now I regret it. He is going away and never will come back. I don't know if I know this man would be a good husband, but I do not love him—I only like him.

I would advise you not to marry this man, Peggy, fine as he may be, unless you love him. In a year and a half, you would have grown to care for him if you were ever going to. It seems to me. Evidently you are in love with him. I am to appear. Only love can make marriage the happy relationship it should be, and it's taking a big risk to promise to gaze across the breakfast table 365 times a year into the face of a man to whom you're indifferent.

Saint and Sinner

By ANNE AUSTIN

Without giving Faith a chance to utter the shocked protests that were trembling on her lips, Cherry skipped into the dining room, snatched her impudent little hat from her head, and flung it expertly so that it became a saucy headgear for the green glass bowl of artificial fruit on the sideboard.

"Hello, Daddy!" In her musical voice there was no hint of anger or resentment for the whipping he had given her the night before. She flung herself like a child against the breast of the stooped, hard-faced man coming on slow, tired feet into the dining room, his spectacles pushed high on his forehead. "Let's kiss and make up, Daddy," she said, laying her cheek against the grayish leather of his face, and smiling like a repentant child.

"All right. Let's eat supper," her father said gruffly, his arm stiff about her slim shoulders, but there were tears in his kind brown eyes. "But no more shenanigans from you, young lady!" he cautioned her with a feeble attempt to impress his authority upon her.

"Gee, you sure know how to use the soft soap, Cherry!" Joy, coming in to supper in a soiled and torn play frock, giggled at the unusual tableau of Cherry kissing her father.

"You shut up!" Cherry whirled upon her, her repentant mood shattered. "You needn't think just because Muggy's sick—that's all. Faith gave us some dried up old coconut to make coconut layer cakes with. We got a whole bakery, with teeny biscuits, 'n' choc'lat cakes 'n' cherry pies 'n'—"

"For goodness sake, go and wash!" Cherry screamed. "Faith, does this child have to go around looking like this? Honestly, I'd die if anybody should happen to drop in and find her looking like that!"

"Today was the first day of school," Faith said. "She wore her new tan linen dress, and of course she had to take it off to keep it nice and clean. And then half a dozen kids came over to do their home work with her, and they got under foot so that I sent them out to play. I didn't care whether they made mud pies or what they did, so long as I could do my work in peace. Slip on that faded pink chambray dress, Joy, honey, and be sure to wash your knees."

"Where's Junior?" Mr. Lane was lading generous helpings of Irish stew from the big bowl into the thick dinner plates.

"Here I am, Dad! I stepped on the gas when I smelled the Irish stew! Don't give me too many carrots, but lots of onions and potatoes."

"This isn't a short order lunch wagon, son," Mr. Lane said mildly, but Faith smiled with amusement as she noted that her father had just exactly what he had requested. "How's business today, Jimmy?"

"Middlin'." "Long" Lane grinned, as he shoveled enthusiastically into his heaping plate of stew. "Cleared about $9, I'd say. Gee, Pop, when I get the old bus paid for, and can go into business for myself deatin' with the jobbers, I'll be 'Get Rich Quick' Wallingford, Jr.—and then I won't give a doggone if you do call me Junior."

He raised his head from his almost prayerful attention to stew, to grin amiably at the members of his family. But when his good-humored, boastful glance rested on Cherry, daintily raising a forkful of meat to her mouth, his jaw dropped, and his eyes bulged ludicrously. "For cryin' out loud!" he ejaculated at last. "Where'd you get the headlight? Anybody but an expert like me'd say it was real. Funny—I didn't think Bob Hathaway'd give you a phony sparkler."

"It's not phony," Cherry smiled at him with maddening coyness, as she rested her chin on her hand, so that the big, square-cut, three-carat diamond showed to the best advantage. "And Bob Hathaway didn't

Her Own Way

A STORY OF A GIRL OF TODAY

THE FIRE

But again I could not help asking myself: "Is this the real love that would last until death do us part? Is it the kind of love that marriage would consummate and make holy?" I did not know.

There was only one thing that I did know—it would probably never be so thrilling as to keep me catching my breath, that came hot and cold to minister to the moods of any lover.

Could one live in the rarified atmosphere of passionate love always? Would one get used to the calmness and sweetness of companionship only?

Again, on the other side of me John Meredith whispered: "Look at me, Judy, and tell me what you are thinking about. What makes your eyes narrow? What makes you pull that soft red mouth which my lips are aching to kiss, into that decisive straight line? Judy, you must be, tonight, all softness and sweetness, you must be to me my dream of love only."

"God, girl, I did not think loving was like this; it hurts, it hurts. I've often dreamed of love, but it only came to me as something which would make me incapable of thinking. Tonight my brain is full of thoughts, long, long thoughts, great ideas, splendid ambitions. Judy, do you know that tonight I am a god, straight and perfect—yes, I am more than a god—I am a man, a man who can love and be loved—again there came the insistent crooning whisper: 'You do love me, don't you, Judy?'"

Without warning there came a most deafening detonation. It sounded as though it were in the room above us. "In a moment everything was excitement again.

"Fire!" shouted a silly coward, and there became a panic-stricken rush toward the outside door, which against them all opened inward.

John reached for me and caught me from under the maddened feet of a half drunken man who was muttering: "Let me get out; let me get out." I am a man, a man who can love and be loved—again there came the insistent crooning whisper: "You do love me, don't you, Judy?"

"Here, here, damn you, who do you think you are?" shouted a man as he casually knocked him down and yelled: "Say, is this another tray of baked Alaska?"

"No," answered Jerry, who was helping Mamie and Judy toward the door.

Then he turned to the crowd behind him and shouted: "Don't push; I don't know what is happening any more than you, but I am sure if the men in this crowd will keep from showing their yellow streaks and walk slowly ahead, everything will be—"

Again another explosion. "The hell there will," someone screamed. "There goes the front of the whole building."

Tomorrow: John's Chance.

PEANUT SAUSAGE
One-half cup peanut butter, two cups browned bread crumbs, one egg, one-fourth teaspoon salt. The bread should be sliced and toasted brown and hard; then put the toast on a board and crush with rolling pin until it becomes a coarse powder. Mix egg, peanut butter and salt into bread crumbs and add enough milk to make a stiff batter. Make in patties and fry in hot grease. A little powdered sage may be added if the flavor is liked.
