

U. S. DOUGHBOY INDIVIDUALIST IN PEACE, WAR

Has Friendly Spirit and Courage That Others Lack.

By William Philip Simms,
Times Staff Correspondent
PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 15.—The American doughboy is indomitable. He is the friendliest, fault-findingest, frolicsomest, fightingest citizen-soldier extant. It has been my lot to watch British, French, Italian, Belgian, Polish, Serbian, Czechoslovakian, Roumanian, Chinese, Russian, Indian and other soldiers, in action and out, and Americans are different from them all.

The American thinks differently, fights differently, plays differently. He's an individualist in peace and war. I saw this in France during the World War, then forgot it, only to be reminded of it here watching the American Legion's big parade this week.

In the summer of 1918 the British were attacking astride the Scarpe, east of Arras. North of the little stream we'd call it a branch or a creek over here—were the Londoners; south of it the Australians. Twice in two days the Australians had moved forward, but had to come back because the Londoners were held up at Chilly, a precipitous cliff, all over which the Germans had planted machine guns.

So out the Londoners were yanked and a perfectly green outfit of Americans, mostly from Illinois, were ordered in at a moment's notice. They didn't even have time to get into position before the British barrage began. This was about dusk. Flaming and fired from their double-quick hike, those boys swarmed over Chilly like ants over an ant hill, not stopping until called off a couple of miles in advance of the immensely tickled Anzacs.

"Say," exclaimed the Australian commander, one of the most artistic cussers in the allied armies, "those Yanks are fighting beautiful. But hell's bells, I'm afraid they'll be learning my boys to swear."

There was a twinkle in his eyes, however, and in his voice a tone of sincere affection. I saw one of those American boys the next morning. He was from the stockyards district of Chicago whose buddies made such a fine showing here last night in peace time "big parade."

Legs Were Broken
He was lying on the ground, helpless, waiting his turn at first aid treatment. Those machine guns on Chilly had mowed his legs from under him, breaking both of them.

"Here I come," he grumbled, "all the way from Chicago hoping to get me a couple of Helms. And now look at me."

"Didn't you get a Helms?" I asked.
"Hell no," he replied. "They got me two minutes after we went over. Crapped out on the first pass. I didn't get no run for my money at all. Ain't it hell?"

What I'm trying to do is to illustrate how and why our doughboys are different. It's not because he cusses, but because he's in such deadly earnest. And it's not because he loves war, for he doesn't, but because when he plays he plays and when he fights he fights. He's there.

From Men-o-War to Schooners

American boys in the German capital toasting their hosts with goblets of beer untamed by Volsteadism. How distasteful they find it after years of American drought is evident in their expressions.

ough. And, being an individualist, if he must go to war he makes it his own personal war and he seems to feel not only his outfit, but he himself, must make a decent showing. Most other soldiers are but impersonal parts of a great machine.

600,000 Saw Parade
Six hundred thousand people, it is estimated, saw that parade of Legionnaires. It was the biggest in the history of the American Legion. It filed past the reviewing stand from shortly after lunch until long after night fall; and while there were banners and flags and uniforms galore, and much good drumming and bugling and marching, it did not impress me in the least as being a military display.

However perfectly drilled they were—and there were organizations that seemed to approach perfection in that line—still they struck me only as citizens having a good time. Nevertheless, like a silver thread reaching from one end to the other of that vast procession of ex-service men, and weaving this whole convention into one piece is the thought expressed in the Legion's constitution telling the wherefore of all, "For God and country to preserve the memories and incidents of the great war, to safeguard and transmit to posterity the principles of justice, freedom and democracy."

G. O. P. DEFENDED IN RESOLUTIONS
Washington Township Club
Hits Back at Adams.
Praises of the Republican party were sung at three meetings in the city, Thursday night. Resolutions defending the party against charges of corruption brought by Thomas H. Adams, Vincennes editor, were adopted at a meeting of the Washington Township Republican Club at the Capitol Ave. Christian Church.

More than 250 voters were present at a Second ward Republican rally at the Central Hebrew Church. Congressman Ralph E. Updike, candidate for re-election, was principal speaker.

Describing the Republican party as the advance agent of prosperity, Charles E. Mendenhall spoke at a Third ward meeting at 944 Fayette St.

Raymond F. Murray, Democratic candidate for Marion County prosecutor, in five addresses in various parts of the city, declared against permitting indictments to die through the statute of limitations.

"I am opposed to criminal prosecutions merely for political effect," Murray said.

Oklahoma's Blind Ex-Senator Coming Next Week.
Thomas P. Gore, Oklahoma's blind former United States Senator, will deliver two addresses in Indiana next week in the interest of the Democratic party's campaign. State Chairman R. Earl Peters announced today.

Gore will speak at Bluffton Wednesday night and at Knights town Thursday night.

Two speeches will be made in the State by Philip J. Garrett, Democratic leader of the House of Representatives at Washington, this week-end. Garrett, a recognized authority by reason of his long service in governmental matters, will speak at Decatur tonight and here tomorrow night.

YOUTH IS MADE MILLIONAIRE AS GIRL SAYS 'YES'

Had to Have Wife in Six Months; Married at Midnight.

By Times Special
CHICAGO, Oct. 15.—A trembling "yes" from Martha Margusson, a pretty cloak model, made her boy friend Pat F. O'Hara a multi-millionaire.

Except for the absence of a villain, the story which came to light here might have fitted the pattern of an oldtime melodrama in which the plithe hero leaped villainous obstacles, married the heroine one minute before midnight and thus came into the millions which were rightfully his providing he had acquired a wife on the date specified by the will.

Is Sole Heir
Pat was sole heir to the $12,500,000 estate left by his foster mother, the late Mrs. Maude King of Kingsville, Texas. By the terms of her will he had to be married within six months or lose the vast ranch kingdom in the Lone Star State.

Several times Pat proposed to his girl friend. But Martha who had been a social custom frowned on hasty marriages even in millions are involved, held back.

Almost desperate as he felt the wealth slipping, Pat proposed again while he and Martha were seated at a table in a Niles Center night club.

"Yes," consented Martha, sealing the fate of the fortune.

Reaches Climax
Then with the aid of romantic traffic policemen the climax was reached swiftly. It was 11 o'clock at night but Pat had previously obtained the marriage license. He borrowed a ring and whispered a word to a motorcycle policeman who routed out Judge Pat Collins to perform the ceremony.

The judge, sensing the romance of the affair, ordered out a squad of motorcycle policemen to escort O'Hara and his bride-to-be to the altar.

Then just as the clock was pealing the hour of midnight, Pat and Martha were married under the tiny gable roof of the building which serves Niles Center both as a court room and a fire engine house.

O'Hara is now in Texas awaiting the final execution of the estate over which he becomes master, Nov. 30.

The cost of living declined 1.7 per cent during the first six months of 1929, according to the Department of Labor.

SALES DIRECTOR SPEAKS

J. W. Frazier, Detroit, sales director of the Chrysler Corporation, addressed seventy-five Indiana Chrysler dealers, distributors and factory representatives at the Indianapolis Athletic Club Thursday. Carl H. Wallerich, president of Carl H. Wallerich, Inc., was host.

Frazier declared that the retail salesman was the most important factor in the automobile business today. He stressed the need for the salesman to follow up advertising.
