Irene Dearest

Your letter about my trousseau nearly made me weep.
Darling—arm yourself with fortitude—firmly and with decision
I am not going to be married in June.

Now, don't argue, Irene. Granted Dick is just about the most attractive lad extant; granted I'm tremendously fond of him—but I just can't take my matrimony seriously. Of course you want to know why, and, equally of course, I'm not going to tell you, but what with all Judge Lindsay's lugubrious articles in the Red Book and the multiplication of divorce cases—I'm just plain scared. And it wasn't a year ago that Amelia Henderson and I were commenting on the unusual freedom of Indianapolis' young married people from conubial snarls. Dick, of course, thinks he's being abused and acts very aloof. I know he won't even ask me to the bachelors' ball at the University Club next month, but somehow or other—have you ever noticed it?—an injured suitor does manage to live through it.

DON'T scold me, darling. Caroline Forry and William Johnson were married Tuesday evening, and there's nothing softer than that. Presbyterian marriage service, unless it's getting a permanent wave. I've lost my enthusiasm for both.

And don't get upset about the things you've already purchased for me. That orchid shawl you got at Liberty's will look adorable with a creamy lace frock I bought for the Country Club dances this summer. The Blanche lace I'll use for underware, and the Nutt de Noel I don't want anyway, because Mrs. Jack Harding says that all feminine America comes back on the boat reeking with it. See if you can get me some La Vierge Folie—the name's more appropriate. And it's lots more expensive!

Now, if you say one word about my breaking my engagement, or if you tell a soul, I won't write again for six months.

ELISABETH HAERLE has been trying to get passage on the Cleveland, for May 5. She wanted to go with the Alex Vonneguts, who sail May 26, but she couldn't get accommodations. She's going over for an orgy of German opera. I bet the Bois de Boulogne will be just like Washington St. this summer! You'll go along saying, "Hello, Anna Louise!" "How do you do, Mrs. Griffith?" "Well, if there isn't Betsy Lockhardt!" Half of Hoosierdom will be out for an airing.

Had a cute party at the Panters Monday night—remember Don Marquis' book "Herndon and Little Group of Serious Thinkers"? Adele Pantzer read an interesting paper on the social service work she is doing emphasizing the ultimate commercial value to the community. Johnny Ruckelshaus, Harry Shepard, and Byrne Elliott nearly broke up the party by announcing that they are going to France for six weeks this summer.

Genevieve Pickrell said she was a recent bride, not long ago, and the evening was exhilarating, because the other two guests were Sabra Lewis and Elisabeth Sanborn, both of whom are to be married in June, and Gene couldn't stage any competition at all in the way of excitement. However, her inning is coming, because the same four made an engagement for exactly one year from that time, and then Gen would be floating about carefree, man-rushed, and responsibilityless, and they would be all bowed down with woe, households, and husbands!

N OW if you really want to know why Dick and I parted forever, it's because of a chuckhole on E. Tenth St. And if you think that's a slim reason, you just ought to have hit it Monday night on the way out to Pantzer's going thirty miles an hour in Dick's car. My head nearly went through the top and I bit my tongue and then I started cussing the city administration, and Dick, being involved in politics, said I was all wrong and women didn't do a thing.

WELL DRESSED WOMEN of INDIANAPOLIS

INDIANAPOLIS is taking seriously the new vogue of black evening wear. Mrs. H. M. Gilchrist, the hostess of a small dinner party at the Spink Arms recently wore a dinner gown of black chiffon over flesh chiffon. The square neck was edged with flesh chiffon. The long sleeves were of flimsy black lace and shirred panels across the front of the skirt were edged with lace. The long-waisted girdle fastened in front with a rhinestone and onyx buckle. She wore sheer black chiffon hose and black satin pumps with large cut steel buckles.

IF YOU'RE SLENDER,
WEAR A SUIT EASTER

Doubled-Breasted, Strictly Tailored, Is Topnotch—
Navy Blue Popular.

By Annette

With due apologies to the great English dramatist, we can easily say, in the world of fashion, that the invariable Easter suit is with us late and soon, during the spring of 1927, for it is as popular as ever.

And after all what is more appropriate for the Sunday morning Easter service than the chic tailleur, if you are slender enough to wear that charming mode. You must be slender, you know, to carry the strictly tailored suit to perfection.

Navy Blue is Good

If your complexion calls for the navy blue suit, then you have the very widest choice of styles and materials. The double breasted suit is ever present and when tailored to perfection is absolutely top-notch. Others have the single button and have a braid binding on the jacket.

The pin stripe, or hair-line as we call it now, is good and with an immaculate white flower on the lapel of your jacket, a sauntly little hat and attractive gloves and shoes what have you left to wish for to make your Easter outfit complete?

Sport Suits of Tweed

Then there are the sport suits of tweed, which by the way are as good for street as in the fanciest shop. The imported weaves come in unusual patterns which "make" the suit.

One suit of light gray worsted was the most attractive which has been shown for some time. It was strictly tailored and was really the most delightful cross between a sport suit and street suit for shopping that could be.

Such combinations, when they come in jersey and silk together have proved themselves among the "best sellers" in the world of fashion during the past month.

"Suit" your figures and your type with the correct material and cut and we'll tell you more later about the accessories which are so all-important.
