

countless harbor craft, all dressed in holiday attire of flags and pennants.

Aboard the Macon, New York's first welcome was made by a brilliant assembly of the city's representatives.

Overhead a "sky writer" soared and circled, writing "Hail Lindy" in letters a mile high across the sky.

Bands played out on the water and on shore. Airplanes swooped and sailed above in numbers.

Aboard the Macon, Lindbergh began his triumphant voyage up the harbor and to the shore, where he massed on the lower end of Manhattan Island literally millions of people were on the sidewalks and in the windows of the skyscrapers.

Glad to Pay

Business at Halt

All business was at a standstill. Every one, the bankers, the lawyers, the financiers, the politicians, and those who do the harder work, were out to welcome Lindbergh.

Just at the moment Lindbergh alighted in the Narrows, Mrs. Evangeline Lodge Lindbergh, his mother, with Mrs. James J. Walker, wife of the mayor of New York, were escorted to the pier where Lindbergh will land.

There they stood, surrounded by members of the welcoming committee and with police holding back the crowds which pressed around, awaiting the arrival of the Macon, bearing Lindbergh.

At almost the same moment the great military parade, with bands, banners, troops, marines and sailors, started from the Battery to herald the coming of the flier.

Thousands Jam Street

At 12:31 p. m. the head of the military parade reached the city hall, before Lindbergh and his escorting ships had reached the Battery. Thousands of people were gathered there, awaiting the coming of the parade and of Lindbergh. They broke into cheers.

From the top of the New York Telephone Company's new building on West St., a United Press correspondent, with a telephone, looked down upon the scene.

From the city hall to the Battery it was a mass of people, the sidewalks not unlike a great garden, with the bright colored dresses of the women and the flashing straw hats of the men. This crowd milled anxiously, like a wind-tossed field.

Over the harbor airplanes circled and swooped while the hundreds of craft in the bay were brilliant with their many-colored pennants and flags.

"Snowstorm" Rages

Over all the lower end of Broadway was the web of ticker tape and streamers, glinting in the sun, with bits of paper tossed high in the breeze above the streets. It was like a snowstorm.

The streets were cleared of all traffic and along the sidewalk edge was a thin line of blue-coated policemen, one officer to each five feet, holding the crowds in check.

The progress up the bay of the Macon was slow. Lindbergh boarded the cutter at 12:30 p. m., boats crowded around almost as far as the eye could see. Then went up the screech and bellow of a hundred whistles and there was bedlam.

Boat Picks Way

The Macon headed for shore, through a lane of ships, small and large, all waving and saluting. But the boats could not restrain their enthusiasm, or rather their masters couldn't, and the lane was not always clear.

The Macon had to wave and pick its way.

In the meantime, Lindbergh's mother and the welcome at the Battery awaited patiently. Those around had a glimpse of Lindbergh's face. In the midst of it all, Mrs. Lindbergh found time to speculate on the danger of a policeman falling into the water.

"He would sink with all those guns," she commented.

She insisted a chair be brought for Mrs. Walker when someone offered her a chair.

Son Isn't Remarkable

She was asked about her boy. "He isn't remarkable," she said smilingly, "he is just a healthy American lad, and he is purposeful."

As the Macon threaded its way up the harbor, planes swooped down toward it, ranging from little, single-seaters, to a great, tri-motored monoplane, each paying respect to the man being hailed to-day as the greatest of the nation's fliers.

Two great amphibian planes circled around and around over the Battery awaiting Lindbergh's coming.

Six more wheeled into sight from the lower bay.

Crowd Cheers Planes

The crowds cheered each plane as it came in sight. It cheered the troops and applauded the bands. In between times it threw more

DEGREES GIVEN 238 STUDENTS AT BUTLER U.

Tigert, U. S. Education Chief, Urges Greater Respect for Nation's Laws.

America, standing baffled by an ever-increasing wave of crime, divorce, and disrespect for law and authority, needs for her salvation a spiritual and intellectual revival, John L. Tigert, United States Commissioner of Education, told Butler University graduates at commencement exercises on the university campus today.

Graduate degrees were conferred on thirteen students and bachelor degrees on 225 bachelor of science and music degrees.

America's application of science to industry and commerce "has completely overrun our discovery and use of knowledge in the sphere of human relations," Tigert said.

Church Torn by Strife

"The church and the whole religious structure is torn with dissension, awaiting a new interpretation," he declared.

Unless the large percentage of voters who do not exercise their right are quickened with a sense of civic duty, the Nation will deteriorate into an oligarchy, he warned.

Tigert lauded the past contributions of Butler to State and Nation and appealed to the graduates to champion the interests of their alma mater.

The university band played while the graduates and faculty members, in cap and gown, paraded to their places.

Diplomas Are Awarded

Dr. Robert J. Aley, university president, presented the diplomas. "Custom has decreed that before the last act of your college course, the conferring of degrees," he said, "the president shall address to you a few remarks. It perhaps is true that these remarks will not in any way change your attitude or influence your lives."

"We go into your various lines of endeavor, and the faculty to remain at Butler to carry on the work of education. Please remember that the fullness and generosity of your service will reflect honor upon your alma mater and make it easier for her to meet the ever-increasing demands made upon her."

As college men and women, you are familiar with the common knowledge of the world; you know how to think things through; you seek to know the facts on both sides of mooted questions; you keep an open mind; you believe in your country and are ready to perform your political duties; you love your neighbors and have a broad charity; you believe in God and will try to perform your obligations to him; these things, of course, you will do.

"Do all of them in the spirit of the second mile, and you will bring the millennium nearer."

The Rev. Thomas W. Crafton, retired pastor of the Third Christian Church, delivered the baccalaureate address to graduates in the university chapel Sunday afternoon.

John Mitchell, Greenfield, was elected alumni association president at the annual meeting Saturday night. Miss Katherine Graydon was re-elected secretary and George Schumaker treasurer. Miss Helen Pascoe responded when this year's class was welcomed into the association.

Record Rush Job Made on Lindbergh Memorial Stamp; Picture Taken by Times Photographer

Ackerman

To M. J. Ackerman, New York photographer for The Times, and NEA Service, goes the honor of having taken this picture of Captain Charles A. Lindbergh's trans-Atlantic airplane "Spirit of St. Louis," which was used by the U. S. post office department in designing the new Lindbergh memorial airmail stamp.

The picture was made by Ackerman at Curtiss flying field, Long Island. Ackerman snapped the "Spirit of St. Louis" as Lindbergh started on a short test flight. This was only two or three days before Lindbergh took off across the Atlantic to unprecedented fame.

In the following story, Rodney Dutcher, Washington writer for The Times and NEA Service, tells how Ackerman's picture came to be chosen for the memorial stamp and how the stamps were turned out in record-breaking time.

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON, June 11.—The postoffice department has printed one of the fastest rush jobs in its history in printing and issuing the new Lindbergh 10-cent air mail stamp.

By the time it has finished production of the contemplated 10,000,000 or 15,000,000 copies of this issue, it will have given The Indianapolis Times NEA Service photograph of Lindbergh's plane the widest circulation ever attained by such a newspaper picture outside of the newspapers themselves.

Ordinarily it takes from three to six weeks for a stamp to be issued from the time the postoffice starts work on it. But Postmaster General New decided to make this a 10-day job in order to have the first stamps on sale by the time of Lindbergh's return.

Officials were confronted by the law forbidding the portrait of any living man to be used on stamps or currency. But it was decided that the law's spirit would not be violated if "Lindbergh Air-Mail" were to be printed on the stamp, if the plane "Spirit of St. Louis" were to be shown with the American coast on the right and the European coast on the left, and if New York and Paris were to be specifically designated with a dotted line between showing the course of flight.

Pictures of "Charlie" Lindbergh's plane have been printed around the world, but none other has been seen by as many persons as this one will be. Taken by Photographer M. J. Ackerman of The Times and NEA Service, it is being reproduced on millions of Lindbergh air mail stamps.

The important question arose as to where to find the best model for the Bureau of Printing and Engraving work to copy.

All available pictures of the "Spirit of St. Louis" in flight were scrutinized. Finally officials selected an NEA photo of the Lindbergh plane as the best.

Artists promptly got to work. They worked Saturday night, all day Sunday, and on into a new week, fashioning the necessary models. The models then were engraved.

After being printed the stamps were dried, gummed, dried again, then perforated, then cut into blocks of 50 each, then packed in packages of 5,000 each to be shipped out on postoffice orders.

Promise was that the first formal postoffice issue would be at St. Louis on the occasion of Lindbergh's homecoming celebration. Meanwhile, however, it was planned to have the stamps ready for Lindbergh on his arrival here.

They will be issued to all air mail route cities and it was expected that about 6,000,000 would be ready within two weeks.

Incidentally, postoffice officials pointed out that St. Louis would be "swamped" by eager stamp collectors "who specialized on 'first covers' and 'first cancellations'."

The entire rush job on the stamps was directed by New and M. L. Eidness, Jr., superintendent of the division of stamps.

EXILED RUSSIAN NOBILITY SEES NEW HOPE RAY

Paris Church Drama Over Prince Hints of Soviet Fall.

By United Press

PARIS, June 13.—Two thousand thousand Russian exiles in Paris, including ex-officers now driving taxicabs, girls who once were princesses and are now cabaret dancers, and former professors now selling newspapers, see signs of hope for themselves in the wholesale Russian execution of monarchists.

The exiles regard the brutal killings of the red enemies as "proof" that the soviet regime is collapsing. A cross-section of their opinions was obtained by the United Press at the mass for Prince Dolgoroukoff at the Rue Daru Orthodox Church.

Tribute to Prince

Hundreds of Russians were there to pay tribute to the prince, remembered as an ardent pacifist, a democratic member of the Duma, and for his aversion to friendly relations with the czar, although he was a direct descendant of the first Russian emperor, Rurik.

A youth garbed as a chauffeur, but wearing a Legion of Honor ribbon, knelt before the bier and kissed the hands of the priest. Then the prelate did a remarkable thing, especially at a funeral.

He stepped back and the "chauffeur" stood up, and the priest saluted.

"Better days" are coming, your highness," he said.

It was dramatic, tremendously so. Dozens of those present, formerly of the wealthiest Russian families, but wearing practically rags, had their hopes of returning to former high stations restored by the priest's words. Discussion of the incident has spread like fire through Russian circles.

Worley Seeks to Speed Law in Carter Case.

Detective Chief Claude M. Worley today sought a way around the law requiring indictment of a prisoner before he can be moved from another state into Indiana, so the return of Tilford Roberts, 28, suspected slayer of Patrolman Charles Carter, from an insane asylum at Lakeland, Ky., might be hastened. No grand jury will be in session until July.

Roberts has been identified by two witnesses as the drink-crazed man who killed Carter in a city street duel May 7. He bears head wounds alleged to have been made by Carter's gun.

Detective Roy Peats asked Prosecutor William H. Remy to ask the State Charities Board to petition the Kentucky charities board to turn Roberts over to Indiana authorities on the ground he is feigning insanity and victimizing the Kentucky institution.

SCHOLL HEARS PLEA FOR LIFE

Wife of Children Slayer Not in Court.

By United Press

VALPARAISO, Ind., June 13.—With his father and mother at his side, but his wife no longer there, Walter A. Scholl, former Indianapolis man, today heard his attorneys plead that he is insane and should not die in the electric chair for murder of his two children in Gary last March.

The arguments climaxed the clemency hearing before Judge Crumpacker in Circuit Court here, where the case was brought on a change of venue. It is left to Judge Crumpacker to rule what Scholl's fate shall be.

Mrs. Margaret Scholl severed her last tie with the slayer in Chicago last week when she obtained a divorce. This lent credence to reports she is to be married again.
