WOUNDED BANDIT IN HOSPITAL SHOT AGAIN

Policeman Fires When Prisoner-Patient Attempts Escape.

By United Press
BETHLEHEM, Pa., June 14.—Andy Brooks, 29, New York robber, under arrest in St. Luke's Hospital here suffering from a bullet wound received in a battle with police, was in a serious condition today, shot a second time as he attempted to escape last night.

Brooks was captured last night after a pistol duel in which Brooks was shot in the leg. He was placed in the hospital under guard. An anonymous telephone call to police yesterday said an attempt would be made to rescue Brooks last night and extra guards were placed on duty. The sound of an automobile driving through the grounds seemed to be a signal for which Brooks waited. He leaped from his cot and, limping painfully, attempted to run down a corridor.

He ignored an order to halt from Policeman Henry, who was guarding him. Henry fired, the bullet striking Brooks in the back and emerging from his chest below the heart.

When officers familiar with the accident were notified, the truck was discovered. Vehicles causing death are held by police, pending trial of the defendant.

TAX REFUND DATE SET

Limit to File Claims Is Dec. 31, County Auditor Says.

Claims for refund of taxes collected under the illegal horizontal tax increase in 1919, 1920 and 1921 must be filed by Dec. 31, it was announced today by County Auditor Harry Dunn. Following a conference with the present and former boards of review, Dunn declared plans for working out distribution of the refunds will be made later.

Many irregularities between increases ordered by the State tax board and the county board were found during inspection of records, Dunn stated.

Joe is Alaska's lone commercial aviator. His sturdy biplane has replaced dog sleds and stage coach in many parts of the United States' most northerly possessions; during the past year he has flown more than 35,000 miles.

And now Marvel, his adventurous young sister, is going to join him and fly with him.

Joe and Marvel have been interested in aviation for years. Together they learned to fly; together they studied airplane construction and design. Then, a year ago, when Joe went to Alaska to establish his air line, Marvel stayed in the United States to act as his purchasing agent.

Spare parts for his airplane, on whose careful selection depended his life, have all been bought and forwarded to him by Marvel. Meanwhile, she has been flying her own plane, perfecting herself as a pilot in preparation for the day that now is almost at hand.

Flying a commercial route over Alaska is more dangerous than doing the same thing in the states. Joe's base is at Fairbanks. He is the chief means of communication between that city and many isolated points in the interior. Often he has bearded prospectors as passengers; sometimes he carries a doctor, a roving mining inspector. At times his plane bears a small fortune in gold dust, gathered in some far-distant spot.

Generally Joe flies at night. For up in those far northern latitudes it is often light 1,000 feet from the ground while it is dark night below. On the average, Joe reports, flying conditions in Alaska are better at night than in the daytime.

Lindy Serious Person, Photographer Asserts

Flyer's Face Not Naturally Smiling One, Says Portrayer.

By Times Special
WASHINGTON, June 14.—Deadly serious is the face of young Charles Lindbergh in the one studio portrait for which he has posed since he came home to America.

This is not chance. There is good reason for it, says the man whose business it is to know such things. W. W. Campbell of the Harris & Ewing studio posed the picture. It is his business, he says, to study the people he portrays and to reflect in his work the character and characteristics he finds in their faces.

Young Lindbergh is a deadly serious person, he says. Campbell chatted with Lindbergh to see if he could draw out the winning smile shown. He did not succeed. Lindbergh was friendly and obliging. He moved about in different postures. He was not at the time either tired or hot or bored.

"But he was serious. Now that's face, for instance, smiles easily and frequently," says Campbell. "Lindbergh's is simply another sort of face. It does not fold naturally and habitually into smiling lines."

It is significant, perhaps, that most of Lindy's laughing pictures have been taken when he was just entering or leaving a plane.

In his quick analysis, Campbell found Lindbergh a person who thinks things over and plans instead of acting hastily.

He found him a person with decided opinions. For instance Lindy has made up his mind that pictures with folded arms "don't go so well." So he doesn't fold his arms.

He is a little deaf, too, and does not respond readily when he is addressed.

"There is no trace of elation in Lindbergh's manner. He appears simply conscientious and polite, and utterly unassuming," says Campbell.
