

DARWIN RIGHT, SCIENTIST SAYS; 40-YEAR STUDY

Man's Antiquity Estimated at Million Years by Sir Arthur Keith.

By United Press
LEEDS, England, Sept. 1.—Darwin was right, definitely and irrefutably, in his theory of man's descent, Sir Arthur Keith, world-famous anthropologist, asserted Wednesday night in a speech summarizing forty years' study of his subject.

"The fundamentals of Darwin's outline of man's history remain unshaken," declared Keith. "I am convinced they never can be shaken. The evidence of man's evolution from an apelike being that has been obtained from the study of fossilized remains is definite and irrefutable."

An almost breathlessly silent assemblage of Great Britain's leading scientists heard the speech, which Keith delivered as president at the opening of the annual convention of the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

Prepares Logical Outline

He had been for years preparing a cold, logical outline of man's origin based on known facts.

A year ago, on his election as president of the association, he announced his speech today would summarize his studies.

The entire scientific world, abroad as well as in England, had awaited it.

As Keith arose to start his speech, only the nervous rustling of papers broke the silence.

"Speaking as foreman of a jury, impelled from men who have devoted their lifetimes in weighing the evidence of a man's origin," he said, "I give the verdict 'yes' to the question: 'Was Darwin right?'

Darwin Is Supported

"Evidence now at our disposal supports the conclusion that man has arisen, as Darwin believed, from an anthropoid ape not higher in the zoological scale than the chimpanzee."

"Man possesses a respectable antiquity of about 1,000,000 years."

Keith's statement regarding the irrefutability of the evidence of man's descent followed.

"Since Darwin's death," he continued, "we have succeeded in tracing fossil remains of man backwards to the Pleistocene (glacial) period and even further to the Pliocene period."

"If Darwin was right, then as we traced back we should have found more bestial in form—nearer to the ape."

That is what we found.

Of Great Complexity

"But the process of man's development was infinitely more complex than Darwin suspected."

"As we go backwards in time we discover that mankind became broken up into separate races as today, but into numerous separate species."

"When we go still further back, these species become so unlike one another that they must be regarded not as separate species merely, but as different genera."

"Amongst this wester or extinct fossil forms strewing the earth we have traced the zig-zag line of man's descent."
