

Marriage Not Immune to Changes

BY MARTHA LEE
Because this is a changing world, everything we are in contact with is constantly being adjusted and re-adjusted.
This is even true of marriage, much as some folks hate to think so. They frequently make themselves very unhappy by regretting that their life partners, in the process of time, seem to be different persons from those they married.
"She was a wonderful girl then. She's exactly opposite from what she was when we were married," a man wails. "He was my ideal, but now I don't see how I could have so been deceived for he's nothing like that now," a woman has written.
The wise husband of wife, if he or she cares enough, will face the fact that there is nothing to be gained by dwelling on uncomplimentary or unhappy comparisons and will endeavor to find a means of adjustment to present conditions and circumstances.

He Has Forged Ahead
Dear Martha Lee: I am nearly 40 years old. For the past seventeen years I have been busy with my home and children, of which I have four. Just lately, it has been coming to me that I have been standing still mentally while my husband has been forging ahead. He has been taking me out lately, meeting his business associates.

It seems to me that they are pitying me because I am not as well posted and cannot talk as intelligently as they. I have tried keeping still, but that does not always do. As my greatest desire is to be a good companion to my husband, any advice from you will be greatly appreciated. ANXIOUS WIFE.
You are very fortunate. First, because you have had discernment enough to realize the situation this early in its development. Second, because you are confronted with the necessity of improving yourself and have the enviable goal of your husband's approval to work for.
In these days of books, improving clubs, extension courses and other means of acquiring information, there should be no difficulty in catching up with friend husband's culture, even though you have the children to give time to. By the way, working in this way, you will make yourself more competent and work while as a mother, too. Don't waste any more time wondering what your husband's friends may be thinking of you. I think it's fine of you to have this sensible ambition.

"A. L. B." says she is somewhat unpopular because she will not "talk smutty, hug or kiss the boys and will not smoke." She says "My standards of life are very high. I read the best literature and have respect for myself. But some of the girls ask if I think I will ever get married, acting this way."

In spite of much seeming evidence to the contrary, I believe men prefer girls for their wives who are feminine and clean-minded. Watch the girls who "pet" so freely, A. L. B. The chances are very good that when the men who now amuse themselves with them, want wives, they'll not care to have these pawed over creatures.

Definition of Beauty and Rarity

BY OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

A century ago a German family emigrated to America. They brought furniture, clothes, and a family of kittens. But from the dear old garden nestled at the foot of the Vosges mountains the grossmutter had brought her seeds—carefully sorted and cherished for the little American garden that was to be.

When the ground was cleared and the logs had been used to build the little cabin on the home-site just west of the Alleghenies—when the barn was finished and the pig pen, and the few animals installed that they had been able to buy in their western pilgrimage, then would grossmutter start her little garden.

There were to be wax-flowers, hydrangeas, and even Easter lilies. There would be hollyhocks and bachelor buttons and fever-few, sweet Williams, zinnias, and everything that Elizabeth loved in the "German garden" we have read about. And so it came to pass.

Among other things in grossmutter's garden was a flower called blaz-ing-star. It was a deep, bright starling red—some indeed were a rich royal purple.
All is gone now. The house, barn, and family have disappeared. There is nothing but a field of flowers, purple red, that waves gracefully in the wind, a memorial to the dear old grandmother.

For years the public has driven along the highway beside it. For years people have said, "What a pretty color those weeds are!" But no one stopped. Women giving parties drove by on their way to florists to buy expensive flowers. "What a pity those flowers are only weeds," they would remark as they passed the field of blazing beauty.

A botanist came to lecture to a club. "By the way," he remarked, "You have an eighth wonder of the world right here at your front door—one of the two existing patches of blazing-star in the country!" He gave it its botanical name also. From beggar to aristocrat in a minute!

In a few days the field was devastated. The flowers became the fashion and florists sought the seed.

"I suffered from impure blood—was weak and I had lost so much weight. I didn't look natural. I had pimples and was also bothered with a breaking-out that itched terribly. I also had boils one after another. I tried different kinds of remedies, but nothing did me any good until a friend advised me to take S.S.S., which I did. This was some time ago. Now I feel well, and I am getting along fine. S.S.S. stopped the itching and it cured me of boils. I advise all weak and run-down people to give S.S.S. a trial. It clears up the skin and makes you strong and fills you with energy." Mrs. J. W. Barker, 1337 Walnut Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.
