FIRST FUND FOR S. H. S. FIELD RAISED IN 1904

$1,000 From Arabian Fair Went for Tract.

An Arabian fair, held by the class of 1904, Shortridge High School, was the source twenty-three years ago of the first $1,000 used in buying the new athletic field, Forty-Second and Haughey Ave., which was dedicated last Friday.

This amount, with about $1,825 from the athletic treasury, which was collected mainly from the Shortridge-Manual games, was turned over to the athletic manager. He was then authorized to buy a site for a field. The site was bought Nov. 26, 1904. A total of $1,425 was first spent on grading and surveys.

Formerly the field was partly owned by Manual Training High School and only recently was bought back in full by Shortridge.

Teacher at Shortridge Is Leader in Literary Work

Mrs. Carey Is Oldest Instructor in Point of Service.

Mrs. Angeline Parmenter Carey's remembrance of early days at Shortridge High School is just one year longer than any other teacher now in the school. Mrs. Carey became a member of the Shortridge faculty in 1882.

Since then she has done considerable literary work of distinction. She is the author of a text book called "The Reader's Basis," which was used for many years in all the upper Junior English classes in Shortridge. She was co-author with Miss Catherine Dunn of Washington, D. C., in the writing of "The Hoosier Year Book," an anthology of quotations from 365 Hoosier authors. Her poems appear in two anthologies of Hoosier verse, "Indiana Authors" and "Indiana Poetry."

Pupils Become Writers
Her poem "The Light of Stars" has become the official poem at Shortridge at each Armistice Day memorial meeting in memory of the Shortridge gold star dead.

Among Shortridge English students who claim Mrs. Carey as their introduction to the pleasures of writing are Hildegard Flanner, the poet, and Ben Douglass, well known as a nature story writer in the Hoosier Year Book. Mrs. Carey has taken a serious interest in her work as a member of the Indianapolis Women's Club. Year after year she has prepared carefully worked out studies of Renan, Tolstol, George Bernard Shaw, and others as her part of its programs.

Attends Many Schools
She has had an active part in the organization of the Federation of Indianapolis Public School Teachers, the Teachers' Mutual Benefit Association and the Association of High School Teachers.

Mrs. Carey was born in Troy, N. Y., a daughter of a bridge and arsenal builder of French descent and a mother who came from an old Massachusetts line of whalers and commanders of sea-going ships. She received her education in the Troy schools and later in the Emma Willard College. She has since taken summer courses in Oxford University, England; Harvard University, and at the University of Chicago.

Let's Have One Grand, Wild Poetry Outburst

Have you a little poet in your school? Now is his or her chance to win recognition for all the little poetic outbursts he or she may have on any subject.

The Times will give two books of current poetry each week, one to the Marion County High School and one to the grade school boy or girl who sends in the best amateur "classic" to the school page editor by Friday of every week, beginning today. Two weeks, until Oct. 21, will be given students to write their verse for the first contest. The first winners will be announced and their poem published Friday, Oct. 28.

The winning poems will be published each Friday, one week after they are sent to the school editor.

All poetry submitted may be either typewritten or in longhand, clearly and carefully written on plain paper. But every poem MUST be the work of the student. No work will be accepted without the signature of the English instructor or teacher of the school.

Begin today working on your poem for the first contest! Only one poem from one student at one time will be acceptable. Any high school or grade school student is eligible to enter the contests. The name, address and school of the student, along with the signature of the teacher must be attached to the work. Address all correspondence in care of the School Editor, The Indianapolis Times.

SPELLING STRESSED

Pamphlet of Misspelled Words Issued at Shortridge.

Shortridge High School English department has issued a four-page pamphlet of spelling words for use in the English classes. William M. Otto, head of the English department, directed preparation of the list.

Three pages of this publication are filled with 236 words misspelled most often in actual work of Shortridge students. These words were picked from a complete list of 800 words. The last page of the leaflet leaves space in which the student may write the words which he misspells.

Another activity of the English department which has started this year is a journalism class for try-outs on the Shortridge Daily Echo staffs. Instructors of this class, which will learn the elements of journalism, are Shortridge students.

REALTORS TOLD TO "DO"

Man Who Thinks He Can't Is Failure, Says Chicagoan.

"A 3-year-old child is the best salesman in the world," he said. "The child thinks he can get anything he wants and usually does, by playing on sympathies of his parents."

O'Brien told the realtors he has no sympathy with those who say business is not as good as it was a few years ago.

SQUIRRELS GO ON SPREE

Twenty Barrels of Mash Make Animals Happy.

The little animals tried to crawl like roosters, walk on their back legs and do the Black Bottom. They did everything but bite the street cars and talk back to the cops.

FUTURE SCHOOL TEACHERS TRAIN IN CLASSROOM

56 Butler Students Spend
Hour Daily Teaching
Pupils at Arsenal High.

About fifty-six students of the education department of Butler University are spending one hour every day facing the "errors" of the school rooms at Arsenal Technical High School as part of their training to become future teachers.

"The attitude of the high school students toward their practice teachers is very good," said Prof. Lee O. Garber, a director of practice teaching of the education course at Butler. "They seem to take the Butler cadets as seriously as if they were their real teachers."

Teach Every Day

The cadets teach their major subject one hour every day at Technical. In the summer they practice on classes at Shortridge High School. The colored students will now go to the new Crispus Attucks High School. Each Butler student goes into the class and substitutes for the real teacher. They are visited once every two weeks by Prof. Garber who checks them "in action" at the beginning of the semester. The course in practice teaching was first offered at Butler in 1920, three years before the State Department of Education required it of all applicants for first grade teachers' licenses.

At that time, Dr. W. L. Richardson, head of the education department, was the only member of the practice teaching department. The first year the course attracted only seven students. Last year 137 were enrolled. Six faculty members now spend most of their time supervising the cadets.

Work With Same Class

The course has proved a success in giving senior students actual experience in the classroom before they graduate. They are assigned at the beginning of the semester to one of a staff of regular teachers of the school. The cadets then meet the same class every day during the entire semester, either helping the teacher, doing actual teaching, or observing the regular teacher at work.

Work at Butler is similar to Indiana University, the University of Chicago, the University of Cleveland, and others where the city schools used to give the cadets experience.

The Butler University Student Teachers Association is made up of students who are going to teach. The organization is social and professional.

PAPER PROJECTS KEEP HANDS OF CHILDREN BUSY

Ingenuity Shown in Exhibit of School Pupils' Work
At Teachers' Library.

While all the Indianapolis grown-ups fussed around last year with the heavy problems of running the town, building memorials and digging ditches, thousands of little hands and minds of Indianapolis school children were intent upon book and paper projects.

But for all the fussing, rushing and money grabbing the school children may have as much to show for a year's work as the whole town together.

Over in the Teachers' Special Library dozens of pictures, books, costume notebooks, musical instruments, dolls and pictures are on display representing the music activities and materials of all the Indianapolis public schools for last year.

83 Schools Represented

Which goes to show that if a child can't build a house neither can dad or mother make a drum out of an oat meal box or play Hansen and Gretel.

All the high schools as well as elementary schools have music work on display. Only six schools besides the new schools out of eighty-nine are not represented in the exhibit.

Every type of music study from the chants of the American Indian to foreign folk lore is represented by drawings, costumes, pictures and other work.

Many of the lower grades of the elementary schools were organized into juvenile bands and orchestras. Little hand-made hats, coats and trousers of the "musicians" were exhibited around the library walls. Many school bands made their own instruments using cereal boxes and heavy wire for drums and triangles, or baby rattlers for sleigh bells.

Daily Musical Programs

In one corner is a marionette setting with miniature characters made by the children. In another, is a brilliantly painted scene from "Hansel and Gretel." Two lone Indians, gifts of the educational museum, stand solemnly by their birch bark canoe and tepee representing the study of Indian music in the schools.

Stacks of music notebooks from both high schools and grades are shown. On the display boards may be found original musical compositions of students or drawings showing the correlations between music and geography, history, or art.

The exhibit is given under the auspices of the music department and directed by Miss Lorle Krull and Ernest G. Hesser, head of the department. Musical programs were given each afternoon of this week.
