BUCKEYE BOOST HANDED WILLIS IS DISCOUNTED

Nine Congressmen Moved for Personal Reasons, Personal View.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—The action of nine out of Ohio's sixteen Republican Congressmen in endorsing the presidential candidacy of Senator Frank B. Willis, in preference to that of Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover, is discounted in political circles in Washington.

They were acting from a purely personal standpoint, it generally is agreed, and as such their motive is understood.

The Congressmen, also, are under political obligation to Willis and it is necessary for them to "play the game" with him, because, regardless of how the Ohio presidential primaries go, Willis will continue in the Senate for four more years.

Everything to Gain. As a candidate Willis has everything to gain and nothing to lose. But the Congressmen are not so fortunately situated. They are up for re-election next fall and are confronted with the threat of Senator Willis that every candidate must choose between him and Hoover.

Without Willis, for example, these Congressmen can not appoint a postmaster in the smallest village in their districts. The Senator maintains the veto power and can prevent confirmation by the Senate. Without Willis' assistance these Congressmen can not get through Congress legislation helpful to their districts.

In order to have a new public building for their districts included in the new $100,000,000 Federal building program, the Senator's assistance is necessary.

More Politics Involved. Another political consideration involved in the Congressmen's desire to support Willis is the fact that Willis dominates the State central committee. This committee can easily trot out opposition in the primaries to Congressmen and hereby cause them expense and embarrassment. Failing to embarrass them in the primaries the committee can be indifferent in the general election when stubborn Democratic opposition appears.

Aside from the Congressmen, most of the Ohio organization is indebted to Willis. He therefore, has a well-oiled machine now active, which, like the Congressmen, deplores Hoover's entry into Ohio, because it will mean a fight. This machine, taking its orders from Willis, is willing to echo his demands that Ohio voters be deprived of the opportunity of demonstrating that the "democracy" sentiment among Ohio Republicans for President" is for Hoover.
