

Enumerating Some Snares for Young Men Bearing Marriage Candidate Label

By MARTHA LEE

THIS is particularly for young men, attractive and eligible for matrimony. When a young man is labeled with the two characteristics of being both presentable and also financially able to support a wife and family, he has to cultivate all wiles worthy of any of our modern awyers, to stay out of the clutches of some clever young woman who has chosen him as a likely candidate for her hand. Here are some of the pitfalls he must watch.

He must be careful not to devote his attention with too much concentration in one spot, or he will be as closely enmeshed in an engagement as any fly in a spider's web. Another little trap is sympathy for a sweet little girl whom no one takes out, which might lead to the acquisition of an uninteresting and unwanted little wife. The young bachelor must keep his kind feelings under control, you know.

The adventuress who wants a young man's pocketbook abounds everywhere. This smart creature has a certain fascination that is irresistible because the young man's chivalry is aroused to protect this "poor girl who is without family or friends."

Just as devastating is the girl who has admirable virtues and characteristics, but who thinks only of a home. To her a husband is merely a means to achieving her ambition, to be a woman in charge of her own establishment. A girl of this sort has no love in her heart and can never give a man the affection and companionship he desires because a home is everything to her.

These are merely a few of the snares a young man must avoid. Remember, young men, it is only fair to you and your future happiness to have some idea of the sort of wife you desire before you say the marriage vows.

Dear Miss Lee: I hate to ask you this because perhaps it is not the thing for a young man to do, but here it is. Do you realize that I am being proposed in to matrimony with a girl whom I like well enough, but whom I don't know my idea of a wife by any means.

Everyone seems to take it for granted that I am being proposed to by Miss Lee, but I have never proposed or had the least intention of doing so. However, even her idea of a wife is not bad. I don't know though this girl never says anything to me, probably she has a certain possessive way of talking about me.

We have always been good pals because we went to school together and though I am not the sort of girl she would like, she always seemed to be ready to go out with me when I asked her to do so. I am not the sort of girl who does not care much for girls so I never have had any other girlfriends. I do so I found in her a very pleasant companion.

Please tell me what you should do. I want to keep the friendship of both this girl and her family because they are very nice people.

Dear L. T.: You are in a bad situation. It would be disastrous for you to marry this girl now because you feel that you have been entangled in a little scheme of which you knew nothing until it was too late. This best thing for you to do is to go away for a long trip, if you can afford it. Give the old excuse of "travelling for your health." Girdingly stop writing while you are gone. By the time you get back, you can tactfully "wiggle out" of the engagement by saying that you realize that you two are unsuited for one another.

Just a thought, R. L. is that perhaps this girl would make you a good wife. I believe persons with the same tastes and ideas have the best possible chance for happiness. If you take a trip, maybe you will find that you really have affection for this girl instead of a platonic friendship.

Dear Miss Lee: Will you please help me? My mother and I are going to be married in secret (we are both of age). We want to go to Cincinnati, Ohio, to be married. We want to keep this a secret because we apply for a license. We have not the least idea of what we will be asked us and we do not want to risk it. We do not know where we might wonder what we are going to do. Please give us an answer and print it in the Times as soon as possible. ANXIOUS C.

Dear Anxious C.: The marriage license is supposed to be issued in the county in which the bride resides. However, this difficulty is overcome by the woman's giving an address in the city in which they choose to be married. The license will be run in the Cincinnati papers, unless you can arrange the matter with the license clerk.

The questions which will be asked you are simple ones, name, age, address, birthplace, parents' name and birthplace, ever been married previously, if so, when, where and to whom, if divorced, or if other husband or wife died, when and where, etc.

My dear children, of course you are of age and have a right to marry whom and how you please, but do not forget that a secret marriage is the cause for much talk and gossip. Please think this over and do not rush into anything impetuous.
