

FORD REPRINTS OLD M'GUFFEY SCHOOL BOOKS

Copies of Famous Readers
Will Be Preserved for Posterity.

By NEA Service
DETROIT, March 9.—Henry Ford, the man who swore a few years ago that "history is bunk," has turned historian himself.
He started in that role by restoring such buildings as Longfellow's Wayside Inn to their colonial state, so that his fellow citizens could see just what life was like in the old days.
He continued by reviving the old-time dances.
And now he has had reprinted the entire list of the famous McGuffey Readers—those books that since 1836 formed the principal educational fodder for 122,000,000 young Americans.
He has brought out the old books exactly as they were, with the original wood cuts and type dress unchanged. Ford is not selling the books, only a small number being printed to preserve them for posterity.
Throughout most of America, except New England, these books became the standard readers for all school children. Except for the Bible, it is probable that no other book in America attained the sales that McGuffey's had.
Despite the tremendous sale of his Readers, McGuffey did not grow rich. He received a royalty of 10 per cent until he had been paid $1,000, and thereafter the books became the property of his publishers. After the Civil War the publishers voluntarily gave McGuffey an annuity until he died.

For Goodness' Sake

"Oh, dear, I do wish some one would invent a string or something which would keep the dress from blowing up above the knees on a windy day," pleads Miss Adelaide Cohn, 3927 College Ave.
And so Lee Williams, Times cartoonist, accommodated the young lady with the Loose Nut invention illustrated. Miss Cohn wins the $2.
Williams suggests that since the strings would be a trifle cumbersome, a pair of trousers would accomplish the same purpose.
There is $2 waiting for the Indianapolis Times reader who suggests a Loose Nut invention that can be illustrated and published. Just address your written idea to "Loose Nut Editor" at the Indianapolis Times.

DANCE TEST TO OPEN MARCH 15

Expected to Create New Hop for Ballrooms.

"To raise the ethical atmosphere of Indiana ballroom dancing" is the purpose of the national and State eccentric dancing contest sponsored by The Indianapolis Times, the Indiana ballroom and the Trianon of Chicago.
The secondary purpose is to find a dance which will replace the hops, skips and whatnots now in vogue throughout the country.

The preliminary contest will be held March 15 at the Indiana ballroom and two winners will be named. Each Thursday night for the three weeks following, two contestants to be named each night.
These eight contestants will meet April 12 for the State championship. In addition to many valuable merchandise prizes, winners in the finals and preliminaries will be awarded gold, silver and bronze medals.
The State champions will be sent to the Trianon ballroom April 17 and 18 to enter the national contest in competition with twenty-nine other State champions.
Persons between the ages of 18 and 25 can enter at any time by filling out the accompanying coupon and sending to The Times or Indiana ballroom. Professionals are barred.

CLEAN TEETH Never Decay
The 30 spaces between your teeth where food sticks and no brush can reach. If not removed your teeth turn yellowish and decay, bad breath and pyorrhea result. People who brush their teeth every day have pyorrhea because they can not clean between their teeth, where brushing is impossible. "Flossy" cleans between the teeth. Teach your children to use "Flossy." The new way to clean quickly is to bite down on the "Flossy" and the silk slides easily in between, removes all germ decay and does not injure the gums. Ask your dentist.
