

Girl in Husband Quest Fares Best by Sticking to 'Be Yourself' Idea

BY MARTHA LEE

THERE is no rule by which a girl can abide to catch a husband. Sometimes the most unattractive girl will marry before her more dashing sister because she realizes that not many chances for matrimony will come her way. Hence the first man who proposes is accepted and then the pretty girls wonder a few years later how such a homely girl ever had the opportunity to marry.

As to what sort of girl a man wants for a wife that varies, of course, entirely with the man's character. Some men want the stay-at-home, wren type girl, while others must have a typical jazz baby or a clothes horse.

Since a man's requisites for a wife vary so much the clever girl knows that she may as well be her natural self and she will have a better chance of making a good match than if she acted in some manner entirely alien to her character.

The modern girl is not so keen to plunge into matrimony as was her ancestor of years ago. Now there are so many interesting careers open to women that any girl would be foolish to accept someone for whom she did not care just for the sheer purpose of having a husband.

Dear Miss Lee: I am a girl past 25. Up until about two years ago I was a very popular girl, going to dances and some place about every night, and having lots of dates with different boys. But none of these boys ever acted serious with me or ever proposed to me. As I thought I was old enough to get married, and as all my friends were getting married, I began to feel I should have to be more settled to win a man. I began to give up dancing and joined a church and started to lead a different life.

But I found that all my friends forgot me, and I never met many boys and that I was lonely. Two years have passed and I am not married yet. I have been around, I do, start dancing and running around, start making and drinking, but I just hope of getting some man just as I am.

I do not care to go back to the old life, but I crave friendship and companionship. It seems that I can not find it this way.

A LONELY GIRL.
Dear Lonely Girl: Your trouble lies in the fact that you are so eager to get married. Most men, you know, never intend to get married. Of course, they do, many of them, but I shall wager that many of them had made firm resolve to lead the life of a gay bachelor instead of settling down with a wife, family and household. When they see that you have matrimony in your mind they are very careful to school their feelings about you so that there is no danger of their unwise to give them such an obvious warning.

Your change in actions and your ways of enjoying yourself was a foolish idea. There is no harm in temperately enjoying oneself and very few young men of this modern day object to the girl who really enjoys life. On the other hand, your decided change from the way you used to be no doubt seemed very hypocritical to your friends. They were right because you were just making use of your church membership to try to get a pious husband.

Dear Martha Lee: What would you think of a young man who gave you his undivided attention for three years but never made any preparation for marriage? Never gave a girl a ring? I have been keeping company with this young man for three years and he has never been serious for him. This was not hard for me to do, however, as I think a great deal of him, but I feel that he is just a flake and my predicament.

Dear Elsie: There are some men like the one of whom you write. They monopolize a girl's time and attention, but are too selfish to marry the girl. However, the girl is so foolish that she deserves such treatment if she continues to go with a trifler like this.

In your case you should come out bluntly and tell this reluctant young man that you have decided it is time you are getting married. Let him know that either he must marry you or you will see no more of him. Any man who goes constantly with one young woman knows that he should propose or else stop seeing this girl so often so that she will have a chance to go with other young men whose intentions are more honorable.

Women Hear Candidates' Declarations

Six candidates for Governor and a representative of a seventh spoke on election questions at the discussion luncheon of the Indianapolis Council of Women Tuesday at the Roberts Park M. E. Church. Mrs. Curtis A. Hodges, chairman of the American citizenship committee of the council, presided and introduced the speakers.

Church day will be observed by the council with a luncheon at the Broadway M. E. Church April 3, when Dr. Roberts of the Central Avenue M. E. Church and J. W. Fortune will speak.

"The only issue in this campaign is: 'Shall the people rule or shall the seekers of special privilege run the Government for them?' Alvah J. Rucker, Republican candidate, said. "The super-government of this State is the public utility monopoly," he continued. "It corrupts our political life and sneers at popular government." He also voiced his satisfaction with the prohibition law.

Urges Clean-Up
Jesse Eschbach, also a Republican, gave the first statement of his platform. "The vital question is a thorough and complete clean-up with the restoration of Indiana to her exalted place among the States." He told of his experience as a member of the Legislature and as Speaker of the House. He said in closing: "If every wife, mother and daughter in Indiana would devote the same courage in the State in the next eight months as they have to the development of Christian homes, they will have solved the political questions in this campaign."

Frederick E. Schorff, Republican, secretary of State, emphasized efficiency in government and harmony and good will. He stated that if elected Governor he would pay special attention to public safety.

J. K. Risk, Democratic candidate, stood for the primary, for prohibition, for honesty in government and for court reforms.

Condemns Commission
"The public service commission is the most obnoxious thing in Indiana," said Olin R. Holt, Democratic candidate. U. S. Lesh, Republican, told members of the council that if there is any good reason why he should be the next Governor, they would have to find it.

Frederick Van Nuy, representing Frank C. Dailey, Democratic candidate, stressed the ability and fearlessness of Mr. Dailey and told of his work as a public official.

During the program, Mrs. E. W. Sweeney, accompanied by Mrs. E. B. Palmer, sang. Luncheon table decorations were American flags and spring flowers.

THE CONNOISSEUR

Mrs. Van de View Gets New Table Centerpieces

Mrs. Van de View decides her table redecoration. So she takes along her son who never fails in inspiration. And together they discuss the pieces earnestly and long. Criticizing and deciding what is right and what is wrong.

They agree that she must have a combination ivory set. And without a tremor she will buy the best that she can get. And a center bowl and urns which have a cherub decoration. With the candlesticks between will make a pleasing combination.

And a crystal swan repposing on a shining mirror plaque. Is the sort of thing a china closet now should never lack. And it goes with slender vases in a pastel shade of green. An ideal decoration for a formal dinner scene.

And although she's very critical, another one will suit her. Just a simple bowl of modernistic pattern made of pewter. With a pair of figurines to give an animated touch. In the gayety of spirit which is valuable as such.

MARYE and 'MOM'

THEIR LETTERS

BY RUTH DEWEY GROVES
Dearest Mom:

Of course the parents of those youngsters who burned the house are to blame. I'm telling you, mom, the kids have 'em hoodooed. I ever have a girl, or a boy, or both, I'll know it if they aren't tucked in bed at a decent hour.

Boys and girls aren't really as defiant as they seem. Just let Dad sit up and wait for them once or twice with the business end of the house slipper and they'll come home when the curfew rings next time.

The whole truth is, Mom, that parents are lax when their children are small and no great harm comes from letting them escape the parental eye a bit. But once the kids reach the age when they can keep their eyes open after 10 o'clock, parents begin to find out that the authority they've been using so sparingly doesn't mean a thing in the lives of their offspring. That's when they start worrying.

Now you may wonder how I come to know so much. Lean closer and I'll whisper it, because I'm afraid I'll shock you if I write it out loud. I gleaned it all from one of those awful psychology books. It's the force of habit, Mom.

Kids who are used to parental authority keep right on obeying their parents from the time they creep until they ankle off to the minister. That is if the authority is real. No self-respecting boy or girl is going to be talked to like a criminal just because pa and ma suddenly wake up to find out that it's spring time in the lives of the younger generation.

To have any influence, authority must be used constantly. The idea of paying no attention to Sister until she comes in after 2 a. m. and then jumping on her with a whole calendar of crimes and misdemeanors won't get a parent anywhere with her.

If Sister had known all her life that there were rules for her she'd have obeyed the rules. If she knew that her parents would sit up to ask her about her evening and engage in a little get-together talk she wouldn't want to come home with anything much to conceal.

It's the parents who fall asleep at 9 p. m., while their youngsters are just waking up, who are to blame. With all my love,
MARYE.
