

FESS CHOICE STIRS COOLIDGE DRAFT GOSSIP

Debate Possibilities Open to 'Keynote Speaker' at G. O. P. Convention.

By United Press
WASHINGTON, April 4.—Selection of Senator Simeon D. Fess of Ohio as 'keynote speaker' for the Republican national convention next June has set political tongues wagging here.

Fess is one of the original 'Draft Coolidge' men and he has indicated he still believes the President will be renominated in case of a deadlock at Kansas City. As temporary chairman of the convention he will deliver the guiding address to the delegates. Political followers here can already see the possibilities that are open to Fess in his speech reviewing the achievements of the Administration and the President.

The selection was made by the committee on arrangements in which Republican leaders favoring the 'Draft Coolidge' movement are influential—leaders such as Chairman William M. Butler of the national committee and Charles D. Hilles of New York.

Senator George Moses (Rep.), New Hampshire, who was chosen permanent chairman, has pronounced himself in favor of the nomination of Secretary of Commerce Hoover.

SMALL TICKET SALES CANCEL SHRINE PLAY

"Madame Sherry" Benefit Presentation Is Called Off.

The musical production, "Madame Sherry" was to have been given by the Murat Shrine next week at the Murat Theater has been cancelled. Potentate William A. Bockstahler announced today, because of the small advance sale for the show.

Rather than take a heavy loss on the presentation, planned to raise funds to send a delegation to the national Shrine conclave at Miami, Fla., the Shrine will shoulder a small loss and call off the production. Bockstahler said.

A concert scheduled for next Sunday afternoon in the Temple social room also has been postponed, because of the conflict with an Ona B. Talbot concert in the theater that afternoon, he said.

FLUE BLAMED FOR FIRE

Loss Estimated at $1,500 to Home of Governor Jackson.

Fire, caused by a defective flue damaged the roof and attic at the executive mansion of Governor Ed Jackson, Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. Norman Batty, daughter of the Governor, was at the home with her son. The Governor, his wife and the rest of his family had gone to Clifty Falls State Park, Madison, Ind.

Damage was estimated at $1,500.

E. H. Cook, salesman for the General Asbestos Supply Company, discovered the blaze, as he approached the house, where he was going to measure and estimate for a fire-proof roof.

Pills Cause Baby's Death

By Times Special
LUCERNE, Ind., April 4.—Mary Belle, 10 months old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Kirk, is dead of poison in pills she swallowed after they had been placed in her crib by her brother, Junior, 3, who mistook them for candy.

College Pick

'IOLANTHE' ON VIEW TODAY AT ENGLISH'S

The Smartest High-Hat Fun of Gilbert and Sullivan Is to Be Found in Their Idea of 'The Peer and the Peri' Here for Two Performances.

BY WALTER D. HICKMAN

THE smartest high-hat fun that Gilbert and Sullivan have given us is to be found in "Iolanthe" or "The Peer and the Peri."

The Winthrop Ames' Gilbert and Sullivan production of "Iolanthe" is on view this afternoon and tonight only at English's.

As we are least acquainted with this opera, I went to the Shubert at Cincinnati last week and saw this company in it.

It is important that we realize in sufficient numbers that these classics of Gilbert and Sullivan are on view at English's this week. I again call your attention to these operas and I take the liberty to recommend "Iolanthe" as done by this company as the smartest fun in satire that we have had here in many seasons. Vera Ross is seen as the Fairy Queen and she has a chance to use her splendid voice in a number of lovely tunes. She was splendid in "The Mikado," but she is magnificently grand in "Iolanthe." In this opera you have Fred Wright as the Lord Chancellor and I think that he is at his best in this role. The chorus of peers and other members of parliament who become fairies is the best ever assembled. Here is fine fun, beautiful melodies presented by a most capable company. I am making a plea that if you want the best that you at least see "Iolanthe" night.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

FURNITURE TO BE TOPIC

Showers Bros. Company to Be Host at Bloomington Friday.

By Times Special

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., April 4.—An announcement which officials of the Showers Brothers Furniture Company here declare will be of great importance to the furniture trade, details of which are being kept secret, will be made Friday when the company will entertain guests from all parts of the United States.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.

The history of "Iolanthe" is explained by the Ames' production in the program as follows:

November 25, 1882, was a gala night for theatergoers in London and New York. The two had just coincidentally in the two cities. Owing to the difference in time, the curtain rose

at the same time.

A dinner will be served at the Bloomington Country Club for the guests, who will include editors of furniture trade magazines and secretaries of retail furniture dealers' associations.