

Husband-Wife Jealousy Most Destructive Form of That Evil Weakness

BY MARTHA LEE

PETTY jealousies often grow into mountainous conceits wrecking a marriage built on the most solid foundation. Just as the small crevice in a high dike may lead to the destruction of that very structure, so the small things in life lead to disaster.

Certainly it is difficult to control jealousy. But stern measures of control must be used, and used quickly.

Jealousy between sweet-hearts, in the final analysis, is not so serious, but jealousy between husband and wife is something that can not be toyed with successfully.

There is a letter from a young girl whose entire life might be ruined by jealousy:

Dear Martha Lee: I am eighteen years old and have been married only three weeks. My husband is a musician and plays at a theater. Last night I went with him to wait while he played, and a girl I knew before I was married came into the show and sat down beside me. My husband forbade me to go with or be seen with this girl, but I didn't know she was coming there. I couldn't tell her to leave.

She stayed until my husband was through playing and asked if we would take her home. My husband was very angry after we had taken her home. After he took me home he left, and I haven't seen him since.

I love him and I am sorry for what I have done. What would you do, Miss Lee? Please help me.

Your husband's jealousy has led him to do a very foolish thing, M. J. B. His love for you was the strongest thing in his soul when he asked you to be his wife.

But now he has let jealousy strangle his love. No doubt when his anger cools he will return to you. For no man whose anger is kindled so quickly can remain in that state for a very long time.

But don't make the mistake of playing up to his sudden fits of peevishness. It is much better to live without a husband whose temper is on a hair-trigger than to live in constant dread of an outburst of anger from one you love.

However, I am inclined to believe that your trouble is just one of the little quarrels that beset all young married life, and that it will blow over more quickly than it started.

Dear Miss Lee: We are two lovely girls and would enjoy the association of a nice girl. That is, if we could find the right kind.

We do not have more than one or two dates with the same fellow because they do not seem to appreciate our blarney ideas of personal character.

Are there no fellows who appreciate a nice girl?

You just bet there are fellows who appreciate a nice girl. There are hundreds of them just here in this city looking for girls just like you "Two Pals."

You seem disappointed in your search for chaps who appreciate high ideals. But don't be discouraged, because the class you are choosing from necessarily is limited.

Keep right on looking for the right one. Have dates with all of them, don't be snooty, and select the one you want. I'll wager a new pair of hose that any number of young men with the qualities you describe will write in here this week to me.

These young fellows don't like to have it said that they don't exist. And that's just what you are saying. I'll publish every letter sent into The Times on the subject.

Here are eight girls in need of a little help.

Dear Miss Lee: Eight of us girls in the Methodist Episcopal Church, with the organist have organized an outfit. We would appreciate it very much if you could suggest an appropriate name.

Martha Lee is up against it now and is asking Times readers to help. If any of you have a suggestion just send it to me.

MARYE and 'MOM'

THEIR LETTERS

BY RUTH DEWEY GROVES

Dear Mom:

To go on with my story about the meeting of Norman and me with Pete—

Norman said some good-old-fashioned words when Pete insisted on my going with him, and then Pete stepped back and looked straight at Norman with fire in his eye.

"The Senator forgets the lady," he said in a voice that sounded like the rustle of silk.

"You'd better do the same," Norman told him. "She doesn't seem to want to keep that date." Then he turned to me and asked me if I knew this masher. I had to say I did, of course, but I was not going to have Norman think I had deliberately walked him into the man. So I told Pete I was very sorry, but he'd have to excuse me because I didn't know I had a heavy date with him.

Then Norman took a step forward, with me on his arm, but Pete got in the way again. He put out a hand and stopped me.

That was too much for Norman. He swung on Pete's jaw and spun him half way around. I guess Norman didn't stop to think how perfectly insane it was. But he knew in an instant all right. Pete whirled back and smashed him in the eye.

By that time a crowd had gathered on the scene and more were coming. It was fighting mad, too. Because it certainly wasn't my fault if those two dumb-bells wanted to indulge in a cheap street scene. So I ducked.

When Norman followed me back into the apartment after finishing it up with Pete—three men pulled 'em apart—I gave him a good sound talking to. And put some chopped steak on his eye. I didn't have any other kind. It would have been all right, but I'd already salted and peppered it.

Norman didn't stay very long after that but this morning he was feeling better. Well, I do hope his aunt won't hear about it.

Dearest love,
MARYE.

Young Mothers Receive Advice of Mrs. Lieber

"Mothers think that they will instinctively know the right thing to do for their child, but this is not their attitude toward cooking their first steak," said Mrs. Emma Lieber, director of the Claire Anne Shover Nursery School before a group of young mothers at Butler University Monday.

Mrs. Lieber said that parenthood should be regarded as a profession requiring years of training, just as every other profession does, and she said that the nursery school exists as much for the benefit of the parent as the child.

"Pecco-mealing," the speaker said, "tends to develop food prejudices. A hungry child will usually eat what is set before him."

The old adage, "a child should be seen but not heard," was refuted by Mrs. Lieber, who said, "Children should be heard. While they should not be allowed to monopolize the conversation, they should be given a chance to express themselves."

This class meets on Monday afternoons at 3 o'clock in Room 8 and is open to all mothers of young children.
