Ice Breaking Up: Speed Necessary in Rescue, Aviators Say.

By LARS HANSEN

Alternate Navigator of the Italia ABOARD RESCUE STEAMSHIP BRAGANZA, June 18.—After twenty-six days of utter solitude in the arctic, General Umberto Nobile and his companions of the polar dirigible Italia, Sunday saw the first of the airplanes searching for them.

Capt. Riser-Larsen and Lieut. Luetzow Holm circled, Sunday, over Nobile's encampment, in which he and five companions are sheltered, Nobile wireless today.

Because of the blinding sunshine, Nobile said, the aviators were not able to see the little tent—painted red to attract their attention—that the Italia's men had erected on the ice.

Nobile said he and his companions waved frantically to try and attract the attention of the Norwegian aviators.

Capt. Riser-Larsen and Lieut. Luetzow Holm arrived back aboard the Braganza at 10 p. m. Sunday. Not until receipt of General Nobile's radio message today did they know that they had flown over the little encampment on the drifting ice off Northeastland.

As Nobile's message that he had seen Riser-Larsen's plane crackled out over the arctic it was relayed instantaneously by all receiving ships.

The Citta Di Milano, the Italia's base ship, received the entire message. Its relay received aboard the Braganza revealed that Nobile even had ignited smoke bombs, whose black smoke contrasted sharply with the dazzlingly white ice.

Urge Speed in Rescue

KINGS BAY, Spitzbergen, June 18.—In complete ignorance that they actually had flown over the ice-floe encampment of Gen. Umberto Nobile and five of his companions of the dirigible Italia, Captain Riser-Larsen and Lieut. Luetzow Holm, returned to the steamship Braganza after a four-hour flight.

Riser-Larsen in charge of all Norwegian work—and Luetzow Holm started from the Braganza at 6 p. m. Sunday. They made for Cape Platen, the northernmost point of Northeastland and the district east of it.

Returning at 10 p. m., they reported that they had "intended if the weather was good to try their utmost to proceed to General Nobile's encampment."

Ice May Break Up

Haste was necessary, they reported on their return, because they saw vast crevasses between ice floes off Northeastland and the ice gradually was breaking up.

Cape Platen is sixty-five miles directly west of Foin Island. It was east of Foin Island that Nobile first reported his position when his emergency radio set began flashing out appeals for help.

The relief ships Tajna and Quest arrived today to join in the search for the Italia's crew.

There was excellent flying weather here today. Five air expeditions today moved slowly toward rescue of the sixteen men who were aboard the polar dirigible on its downward flight from the North Pole.

Amundsen to Start

Major Maddelena is at Vadsoe still attempting to reach the northlands. The Italian ace flew as far north as Bear Island Sunday, but finally was forced to return by bad climatic conditions.

Road Amundsen and Lieutenant Dietrichson are preparing to leave Tromsø, Norway, today in company with Major Gullbaud, French flier. The Swedish airplane Uppland is at Narvik preparing to start from Kings Bay as soon as bad weather moderates.

The steamer Braganza now is near North Cape, flying through blocked waters, in attempt to proceed eastward to where it is thought likely Nobile will be found.

Steamship Hobby Returns

The Norwegian steamer Hobby, which was one of the first boats to proceed into the north in this relief expedition, returned to King's Bay, Sunday. It will be assigned to the Norwegian navy immediately.

Meanwhile, reports reached here that the Soviet vessel Krassin, one of the largest of the Russian ice breakers, would go immediately to Bergen for refueling. From that point the Krassin will proceed to Foin Island.

The Pen Is—

Ink Will Win the War for Herb or Al; Slogan's the Thing.

By THOMAS L. STOKES

United Press Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, June 18.—The coming campaign will be a holiday for the phrase-makers.

It will be a battle of slogans. Hoover, though not a dramatic figure, inspired a whole unbridled sloganry—if such it might be called—during the war. From all indications his campaign managers are going to use the same tactics in the presidential battle.

"Who but Hoover?" "Who- Hoover?"

These were some of the phrases used before the delegates answered the first question, convincingly.

Gov. ALFRED E. SMITH, of New York, also has been a sloganizer. From the East Side streets have come some racy phrases that have caught on. Smith probably will borrow some of these, or produce more in the same vein. If named the Democratic candidate.

Long they have called the New York Governor "Al."

Incongruous as it may seem, they are beginning to call Hoover "Herb."

That bespeaks a human note that will be injected into the coming campaign.

Just what turn the slogans will take cannot be told yet, but an effort will be made to "humanize" Hoover. Slogans are queer things. Often they are meaningless, but the most meaningless often catch on.

TWO lively campaign songs already are on the Hoover bandstand. Smith has "The Side-walks of New York."

"He taught us to conserve—to preserve—and to serve" is a line in one of the Hoover songs, recalling the sugar-saving, meat-saving days of the war.

From Hoover's farm enemies, has come the slogan—Borrowed from the war days. "Hooverize and Pauperize." It's going to be a pen and ink war.

G. O. P. PLANS FARM TACTICS

See Problem in Rural Areas of Six States.

By ROSCOE B. FLEMING

KANSAS, CITY, Mo., June 18.—

Republican leaders studying the problem of carrying the farm belt States, believe their main problem will be in about forty-five rural convention districts in six States. The belief is based on a study of the convention vote on the McNary-Haugen farm relief plank, which was 267 to 817.

The Kansas and Nebraska delegations divided on the question, and Oklahoma was solidly against the McNary-Haugen plank.

Illinois, North Dakota and South Dakota delegations voted solidly for the plank and Indiana, Iowa and Minnesota cast large majorities for it.

Much of the farm missionary work may be confined to rural Illinois, rural Indiana, South and North Dakota, Minnesota and Iowa. Farm feeling against Hoover in Kansas, Nebraska and Oklahoma, it is thought, is already largely allayed by the selection of Senator Curtis for vice president.
