

TALKING IT OVER WITH JOE WILLIAMS

NEW YORK, July 9.—Because Charlie Harvey is an estimable gentleman deservedly popular and is looked on as a "good old soul" nobody gives him an argument when he goes around these days predicting what Thomas Heeney is going to do to Gene Tunney this month at the Yankee stadium.

Quite a number of the boys listen to Charlie and remark absently, "Yep, that's right Charlie. You've got a good boy there and he's liable to do it." Heeney

Then in an aside they add with more or less earnestness, "I'd like to see that bozo win just for Charlie's sake."

It's been a long time since England has had a direct or indirect representative in the heavyweight finals either in this country or over there. For this reason Heeney is looked on as something of a phenomenon. If he should win, his victory would be properly and appropriately indexed with the miles of the age.

Charlie Mitchell was England's last great heavyweight. He was in his prime about forty years ago. When he left the field he left no worthy successor. In all these following years England has been unable to develop one first-class fighting man among the big fellows.

FOR a while Bombadier Wells looked as if he might qualify. He had plenty of class. He was typically a British product—one of those stand-up boys with flashy foot work and two hands that stressed deftness rather than destruction. His American debut was not auspicious. He lost to Al Palzer, one of the current white hope non-descripts, in three rounds. He did better in his next start knocking out Tom Kennedy in eight rounds, an embarrassing Kennedy never having been able to live down. At present he is an exile in the Hollywood film colony.

This performance fanned fresh interest in the possibilities of the Bombadier who really was a fine looking machine in action, and as fine a boxer of his size this nation had seen since Corbett's heyday. Six months later he was matched against Gunboat Smith. The Gunner stopped him in two rounds.

That was the end of Wells as a serious menace. A gentle tap on the chin was usually all that was needed to spread the Bombadier. The last I heard of him the Bombadier had taken up golf in an important way and was shooting in the low 70s.

PIL SCOTT, the newest cut in English heavyweight champions came over here last with the advance threat of battling his way into a championship fight.

Scott got off to a comical start. They gave him Knute Hansen to start with. Knute hit him seven times and each time Scott hit the floor. Curiously, Scott went on to prove he had something. The trouble was Hansen hadn't given him a chance to show it. Among other things, he gave Risko a hard fight and knocked out Monte Munn.

This was a fine comeback for a man who had looked utterly hopeless in his debut. You may hear more of Scott later.
