

Working Wife Wise or Foolish, Depending Upon Varying Circumstances

BY MARTHA LEE

WHEN a married woman continues to work after marriage, just exactly what bearing does it have upon her happiness and her home life? Under what conditions is she justified in continuing a job after marriage?

Marriage is so much of a job in itself, it requires so much work, so much attention in order to do the thing right, that it is next to impossible to combine it with another vocation. But, there are times and circumstances that justify it.

There are economic reasons that make employment of the wife a necessity, and then it is a case of making the two jobs click. That reason makes all the difference in the world in the attitude of the husband toward his working wife.

If she is working merely to obtain things for herself that she would not be able to have if she did not work, then his attitude may be entirely different. He may feel slighted at her inattention to his home and her duties as a wife.

Then there is the husband himself to be taken into consideration. If he is inclined to be lazy and finds that his wife will work and help with the upkeep of the home and the support of the family, he is apt to become dependent upon her to such an extent that it will be impossible to continue the maintenance of that home without her assistance.

So, my dears, if you are thinking of marrying and continuing your work after marriage, consider seriously the type of man you are marrying. Think just what effect your working is apt to have upon him.

If, for instance, he is a particularly home loving man, how it is going to seem to him to come home at night, tired and hungry, to find you, just getting home from your work, also tired and hungry and perhaps a little cross, the house cluttered from the morning scramble to get to work on time, and to sit down to a flock of canned food and a hurriedly fried steak.

Will he seek entertainment from other sources if you are too tired to go with him to the places he wants to go? And, above all, will he become dependent upon the money you earn to help keep the home up, the rent and grocery bill paid, and become indifferent to getting ahead himself? Here is what a woman who has experienced these things has to say:

Dear Miss Lee: I will relate just a few incidents of my life. I would like to know what you would do, were you in my place? I was married five years ago, my marriage being a happy one. About the third year of my marriage, I began associating with other women. I kept this up for a number of years, and I kept my husband in the dark about it. I thought the knowledge of it would disgrace me. I lived a number of years that way, but my love for him began to grow cold. I am now a woman in my forties and have four children of whom I am very proud. I have worked hard, been economical and Christian and have raised my children that way.

Now my husband is past middle age. He hasn't saved a cent, hasn't any friends, hasn't contributed to the support of the home for half a year, and craves constantly about everything I work for. The people in the place where I don't know what to do. He makes our home life simply unbearable. I don't know whether to stay or to break away. WONDERING.

There are so many angles to this case that you are probably wondering why I chose the one about your working, but of all the others I could figure out, Wondering, that seemed to have the most bearing on things in general. Of course, you did wrong in the first place not to just have it out with him about his infidelity. He was apparently the type of man who would sit back and let you work and keep up the home as long as you were willing to do so.

He is soured on life, because he has drained the cup and tasted the dregs of his own desires. He needs money to do about leaving him. That is a question for you to discuss with him and your children, but at least do not allow him to be a parasite any longer. That is the worst thing that could happen to him. If he can't earn a living for you and your children, at least make him earn his own.

Family Menus

BY SISTER MARY

BREAKFAST—Yellow plums, cereal, cream, minced cottage ham with creamed potatoes, cornmeal and white flour muffins, milk, coffee.

LUNCHEON—Jellied veal loaf with stuffed beef salad, toasted muffins, prune whip, milk, tea.

DINNER—Casserole of lamb, mashed potatoes, buttered cauliflower and peas, cabbage and shredded lettuce salad, raspberry parfait, sponge cake, milk, coffee.

Equal parts of shredded new cabbage and head lettuce are combined and served with a sour cream dressing to make the dinner salad. Shredded leaf lettuce works up very well in this salad if head lettuce is not at hand.

Turn jellied veal loaf out on a large platter and surround with stuffed beef salad. This makes a most attractive dish and simplifies serving.

Casserole of Lamb—Two pounds boned lamb, one-fourth cup finely chopped raw carrot, two tablespoons minced onion, two tablespoons minced parsley, two teaspoons salt, one-fourth teaspoon pepper, flour.

Cut lamb in uniform pieces and roll in seasoned flour. Brown quickly on both sides in hot drippings. Arrange in casserole, sprinkle over with carrots, onions and parsley and add cold water to cover. Cover casserole and cook slowly for four hours. Thicken gravy if desired and serve from casserole.

Amica Meeting Tonight—Members of the Amica club will meet this evening at the home of Mrs. Jack Salter. Mrs. Frank Richards will talk on "The Life of Helen Keller" and responses will be on "My Favorite Book."

PLACES THEATRICAL ATTIRE

At the left is Pola Negri in a Patou frock which she wears with the air of a tragedy queen. She lends a slightly exotic touch, in the picture at the right, to the sports costume designed especially for her.

BY JEAN PATOU

PARIS, Aug. 22.—Some people have expressed to me their surprise to my not having more cinema artists as clients. The reason for this perhaps lies in the fact that a cinema artist's way of wearing a dress is incompatible with the genre of my creations.

I do not say this in a spirit of criticism. A cinema artist could, in fact, turn the criticism back on me. I also do not mean to imply that cinema artists dress badly. A woman with character and originality always looks well but there are other courtesies who are specialized in creating stage dresses and can meet the requirements of both stage and screen.

A dress which is destined to be worn on the stage always has to be more striking, more nearly of the "costume" type, in order to look effective. The theatrical style of dress is also necessary in the movies and consequently is not in any way related to the Patou style, which explains why I do not count many actresses among my clientele.

What may be true as far as the cinema is concerned, does not necessarily mean that off the stage an actress cannot wear my creations. I believe anyone will admit that my dresses, as worn by Pola Negri, lose nothing of their character which a woman imparts parts that touch of originality to them which every dress needs and which, after all, a couturier likes to see.

It is just that touch of character which a woman imparts to a dress which repays a creator for all his efforts.

Pola Negri is a woman of nice discernment where clothes are concerned and she showed it in her choice of the gowns I made for her. The black georgette dress she chose, for example, is quite complicated but still is in line with the present fashion. It is a dress, however, which was created especially for her.

There are few women who could impart that touch of originality to the sleeves which leave the arm bare or who could carry off the unusual neckband which lends the finishing touch to the gown.

People may be surprised to hear that Pola Negri looks equally well in sports clothes, to which, however, she manages to impart a very personal touch.

The sports suit she chose was not meant originally to be worn with a turban. A turban suits Princess Diviana's style of beauty, though, and does not in any way spoil the effect of the sports ensemble. This does not mean that another woman could carry it off as well, but therein lies the secret of personality.
