

Asks Advice to Stop Men Proposing

There is the problem of girl who cannot seem to get along with men; the one about the girl who has not met any men; the triangles in their various and sundry forms, but here is a brand new something to puzzle over. Just what does a girl do who is too attractive? When she is annoyed with having to watch practically every man who meets her fall in love with her.

So you see the solution to some people's troubles is not necessarily the beginning of wisdom for others, and what solves things for one person might mean a lot of grief to someone else.

This sweet young thing says: Dear Miss Lee—I am a reader of your column and I marvel at the advice you give. I have never found anything that would lead to a solution of my problem, hence this letter.

You wonder if I know what it is that fellows always get so serious with girls, especially when they know that their salaries would justify them in getting married?

I am 19, decent and respectable and come from a refined family. I have many friends and have gone with a number of boys, but none steady. And I will say that among them, none has been respectful in any way, principally, because I chose my company.

I have never gone with anyone steady, the longest time being three months. I always try to be kind and polite to everyone. I do not know if it is because I am so affectionate and kind, but it seems that all my friends are not satisfied with being my friends. Instead they want to be my sweethearts, their alone and some even husbands.

Now Miss Lee, I do not know how you feel about this, but I consider it a rather serious matter. I like to have friends and I enjoy going places with the boys occasionally. But I have a good home, position and until I am certain that I can better myself, I intend to stay single.

The boys tell me that I am a wonderful girl, not another in a million like me, and that sort of thing, I tell them that I don't believe them as I know it is very easy to talk, that I suppose they hand all the girls the same line. They say that I am the only one, and the longer I go with them, the worse it gets. So I am just forced to refuse them dates. I doubt if any of them really loves me, but folks tell me that it is not natural for boys to cry when I tell them I don't believe it. They say how much they like me.

I don't want any one to get crazy about me, but I dislike very much to be obliged to turn them down cold in order to prevent such things. I don't know any other way out. Could you suggest something?

You might try wearing a linen duster and carrying a sand pail and a buggy whip in your hands when you go out. No one can make love to any one who looks ridiculous. You would be performing a great good—keep a dozen or so good fellows in circulation, amused, interested, and above all, light hearted. If you make them laugh they will not have time to think of their unrequited love. You might practice up on not being quite so sweet, also. That often helps in a situation of this kind.

YOUR CHILD

Difficult Task Helps Child

BY OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON
I DO not believe in "forcing" children. There is seldom anything gained in hammering away at a child day in and day out to get him to do something that is absolutely beyond his comprehension.

Nothing is likely to result from that but mental confusion.

But on the other hand I should not encourage him to give up too easily. It is good for a child occasionally to have things to do that are not quite within his scope of understanding or accomplishment.

If we were always to do things we know how to do perfectly there would be no advancement.

There isn't a thing wrong once in a blue moon for the mother of twelve-year-old Elizabeth to say, "I won't be home in time to get dinner this evening, but there is plenty of food to cook. You see that your father and the boys are fed."

Elizabeth may be thunderstruck, unhappy and indignant. Furthermore her father may have to get out his indignation pills afterwards and the boys sneak off to the hot-dog stand an hour later to fill up the vacuum that nature seems to abhor, but Elizabeth surely will have learned something of culinary skill in the experiment and make mistakes she won't make again.

Jack's father may say to him, "I ordered some lumber today for the partitions in the vegetable cellar your mother has been wanting. Tomorrow is Saturday and I want you to get at it and do what you can." Jack may not claim cousinship with the gentleman of the rhyme, "This is the house that Jack built."

Perhaps he knows no more about a hammer and a saw than I know about wireless telegraphy. But if he is worth his salt he is going to put together some boards in such a way that the potatoes, apples, cabbages, carrots and the turnips, or whatever else one keeps on the dirt floor of a "vegetable cellar" through the winter, won't be rubbing elbows with one another.

The next time he does any carpenter work, he will know more about wood and nails, angles and corners, sawing and planing, than he did before.

It need not be cooking. It need not be hammering. It need not be nothing requiring physical prowess or cleverness, but merely a process of the mind.

No one deserves praise so much for the things he knows how to do well, as for the thing that he does not know how to do, but isn't afraid to tackle.

It is one of the greatest character builders I know. But, of course, like all other things, should be done within reason. And allowances should be made for failure.

Street Pumps

Autumn walking shoes, concentrate on the pump. Call-skin, lizard, sharkskin and suede are the favorite media.

Shoe Trees

Shoes are often stretched by having too large shoe trees inserted. Trees should be just the length of the shoe, as well as just as wide in the tip.

Putty Undies

New lingerie goes in strong for brown shades, as do dresses. The latest sets are of exquisite nylon, in what is known as putty brown, slightly darker than beige.

TAILORED GLOVE

Smartly tailored this glove with interesting model design applied diagonally across the top. A perforated beige strip and two narrow ones of brown on biscuit kid.

Woman's Day

BY ALLENE SUMNER

People don't know how to play naturally and wholesomely any more, they say. The only recreation that "clicks" is something hot and lazy and artificial and extravagant—dining at a roadside or cabaret, dancing in a crowded, overheated ballroom with grotesquely shifting colored lights drenching everyone; or the amusement parks, shoot-the-chutes and funny houses.

Then the critic launches into a rhapsody of the good old days when men and women were content with simple pleasures—hayrack rides under a copper moon, picnics in cool, leafy groves; marshmallow and corn roasts, sleigh rides ending in oyster suppers.

One hears all this and is inclined to nod a sage agreement. Then one sometimes gets a glimpse of things as they really are.

"We—my brother and I—decided to turn back to an old childhood page and go fishing on a holiday not so long ago in a certain old muddy pond where grew the tastiest blueheads that ever swam."

Years ago the long hours of summer had found us beside that sedgey, reed-grown pond. Sometimes mother would give us a bag of sandwiches and cookies and bananas and we would stay all day—not fishing all the time, but pushing our old flat-bottomed scow around the pond, scaring up the russets, finding yellow and white winged blackbirds for the blue pickerel weed.

The old pond was miles away from where the years had brought us, but with a before sunrise start we knew that we could make it.

"Probably the fish don't bite nearly so fast as we seem to remember," we agreed, "and they're probably not nearly so big as we remember them, but it'll be a quiet, restful day anyway—there won't be a soul around—everyone will be at an amusement park." So we went.

The pond was there. The red-winged blackbirds were there. The blue pickerel weed and the pond lilies were there, and so were the giant bullfrogs and sweet water-cress. But we were not alone. We counted twenty-four fishermen and women circling the little pond. Most of them, judging by the queue of autos at the pond's edge, had come a long way, too. They wore city clothes. Many of them were perched on camp stools. They lunched from

The next court of awards will be held Friday evening, Oct. 28. Any badge may be obtained at the October court, but all recommendations must be in the Girl Scout office not later than Saturday, Oct. 13.

The office staff now consists of Miss Jean Adamson, acting local director; Miss Miriam Fay and Miss Jane Albom, field captains, and Miss Florence Stack, office secretary.

Timmerman-Huber

Miss Charlotte Faye Huber, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Huber, became the bride of Elvin Timmerman, son of Mrs. Christine Timmerman, Beech Grove, at the old Bethel Church Wednesday evening, the Rev. Ethelbert Lester officiating.

The last word in picnic kits and thermos bottles.

And their faces were fairly radiant! They loved it. They were not interlopers in our childhood's paradise. They belonged there. But the tragedy was that the out-of-the-way quiet secluded spots of earth are becoming too few to go around. And as a result there is no solitude for anyone.

But stop telling us that people no longer like "natural outdoor pleasures." Real estate men will tell you that a funny out-at-the-heels shack or cabin by a river or lake will sell like hot cakes—that the market simply doesn't meet the demand for this sort of thing.

"They don't care for conveniences," they'll tell you. "They just want lots of trees and water and birds and quiet."

Poor humans of a modern industrial day fighting not for "artificial pleasures," but for their birthright of sun and star and moon and lake and tree!

Very often Mr. Vandie gives a lot of invitations.

To the openings and then again he follows incursions.

And betakes himself alone to sit in solitary ease.

To survey the audience, his curiosity to please.

He could call the roll of all the Social Register and find

Not a single absentee, and just because he's so inclined

He examines all the jewelry, a crystal choker here

Set with mirror backs to make it scintillate afar and near.

His binoculars are clever and discriminating, too

In the articles they concentrate upon to bring to view—

Here's another crystal necklace set with shining links of gold

On a debutante who really is a picture to behold.

In between the acts he doesn't even smoke a cigarette

For he doesn't want to miss a single sight that he can get.

And rewarded by a lady in a lengthy crystal chain

He decides to stay inside of intermission time again.

Bridge Fete Is Given for Bride-Elect

Miss Helen De Velling, 3954 Ruckle St., was hostess Friday afternoon at a bridge party and miscellaneous shower in honor of Miss Mary Alice Wishard, whose marriage to Richard L. Federman, Brookville, will take place Wednesday.

Appointments and decorations were in pink and blue, the bridal colors. Garden flowers in those shades decorated the house and the ices were served in miniature blue flower pots, with butterfly roses. The tables were arranged with white tapers in blue crystal holders, tied with pink tulle.

The gifts were presented to Miss Wishard in a huge bride's bouquet. Guests with the bride-elect and her mother were Mesdames Alice Irwin, F. N. Crowell, Donald Le Fuz, Lawrence Wentmore and C. L. Masters, Brookville; Misses Edith Corry, Laura Templeton, Gertrude Insley, Helen Wilson, Marian Marshall, Mary Lee Orloff, Constance Johnson and Mildred Masters, Brookville.

The hostess was assisted by her mother, Mrs. L. P. De Velling.

Prize Recipes by Readers

NOTE—The Times will give $1 for each recipe submitted by a reader, judged of sufficient merit to be printed in this column. One recipe is printed daily except Friday, when twenty are given. Address Recipe Editor of The Times. Prize will be mailed to winners.

Corn Fritters
Two cups corn cut from cob, two level teaspoons baking powder, one-half cup flour, two beaten eggs, one-half level teaspoon salt, pinch pepper, one-half cup milk and one tablespoon melted butter.

Sift dry ingredients thoroughly. Rub in butter and add liquids. Beat well and fry like other fritters in a deep kettle of fat. Serve hot.

MRS. MARY LONG, 810 Jefferson St., Crawfordsville.

Hot Soda

If your sink drain smells, treat it with a hot solution of washing soda. It is a good idea to do this frequently, not to wait until it smells.

Gilt China

Some new china has a tiny edging of gilt to emphasize its pattern. When washing this type use very little soap in the water as the soap takes off the gilt.

Scorch Stains

If you scorch an article rub soap on the scorched place and put out in the sun. Next cover with a thin mixture of starch and water and put in the sun. Alternate several times if the spot is stubborn. It will come out eventually.

Ankle Bands

Colorful wooden ankle bands, about the width of the cuff on summer sport shoes, are appearing for fall novelties under the name of anklets. They are to be worn over the stockings.

Brown Hosiery

Brown hosiery promises many attractive dark shades. Tawnee and chaddee are two new sombre browns and russet and acajou are browns with a lot of life to them.

Many street frocks have high-low necks that can be worn either way. But many new night gowns have high necks; dainty little standing collars of lace and silk.
