

Girl to Wed Man From Society's 'Inner Circle' Worries About Future

CAN the barrier that divides the "inner circle" from the mediocre, the commonplace, be cleared with one bound, that being the marriage of a member of the one set with a member of the other? Is it ever successful?

Can a girl of refinement and spirit and sensitiveness put up with the slights and subtle insults that are apt to have to be borne? These are things that should be considered seriously before such a marriage.

When every one else is talking about Deauville and Paris and Nice and who they saw there and what they did at Cape Cod last summer and you know nothing about those things at all excepting that there are such places to be gone to, it makes things rather bad. Why are your points of contact with persons like that? You can no more speak their language than they could take down a letter in short hand. Some day things may be so that you can, but what about the intervening time?

If a girl has been self-supporting, has had a career of some sort, has all her life been busy and occupied, it is pretty hard to find nine or ten hours a day with nothing to do but amuse herself, try to find something to occupy those dragging hours. There is probably not much housework, and managing servants is something that has not been gone into very seriously. And what is left?

The companionship of the friends of the husband and his family. Persons with whom the girl has nothing in common, their pleasures and amusements, that she knows nothing about—golf, horseback riding, tennis. She has worked all her life and has had no time to learn these games; or if she has learned them it is probably in a desultory way.

And if, as I said before, she has spirit and sensitiveness she is apt to be miserably unhappy before she becomes oriented. I have a letter from a girl today who has such a problem to solve.

Dear Miss Lee—I am engaged to marry a young man whose family is very wealthy. They are socially prominent and well established in the town where we live. My family is very respectable people, but all our lives we have been in poor circumstances. I have been working since I left school and although my work could not in any sense be called a career, I like it immensely.

The young man's family seem fond of me. There are no objections there. But in my own mind I cannot picture all her life and she is not pleased to see me. I cannot picture all her life and she is not pleased to see me. I cannot picture all her life and she is not pleased to see me. I cannot picture all her life and she is not pleased to see me.

You seem wholesome and sensible enough, Miss Lee, to be able to overcome this feeling you have about your inability to fit in with your fiancé and his family. If you are well mannered and have poise enough, I am sure you will get on splendidly. Your fiancé must believe that you have or he would not have asked you to marry him. You have a double advantage in conditions as they are. You have seen life and had it make things very hard for you. You can therefore look on others with the sympathy and understanding that your experiences have given you. At the same time, you are going to have a chance now to play, to have life and all its good things at your feet. You seem to have enough pluck to play the game with the other now. If you love this boy, don't let foolish fears interfere with your happiness.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN

BY MARILYN

We had the best time at Genevieve Pickrell's luncheon for Amelia at the Woodstock Monday. Mrs. Winslow, Betsy Lockard, Amelia and I played a little desultory bridge on the front veranda before lunch—only it wasn't so darned desultory because I lost $1.30. At lunch Mrs. Maurice Angell, Mrs. Fred Boone, Mrs. Laurens Henderson and the rest of us got into a heated argument about what three books aside from the Bible and the dictionary we would want to be marooned with on a desert island all alone. Amelia said one of her three would certainly be Wells' Outline of History. Peg Winslow got high-hat and wanted a volume of Browning's poetry and somebody else hadn't finished "The Green Murder Case" and said she wouldn't move a step without knowing who the murderer was. But Betsy finished the conversation by declaring there was absolutely no sense in being marooned on a desert island all alone anyway. Which is indisputable.

Amelia said the cleverest and most original acceptance she had received to her wedding invitations was from Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Carter. Mrs. Frank Fishback's parents. A long time ago Amelia had wanted Arthella to do something her mother wouldn't let her do and Amelia had said, "Arthella, you tell your mother I think she's a prune!" And Arthella, in an off-hand moment, did. From that time on Mrs. Carter used to tease Amelia about being called a prune. Well, Amelia received a little box the other day with two little prunes in it with toothpicks stuck in them for arms and legs and tiny beads "or eyes and mouths, and a small card bearing the inscription, "The prunes accept!" Her guilty conscience indicated the authorship.

After Genevieve's luncheon, the party adjourned in time to give Amelia time to change her frock from a most becoming brown sport outfit which she wore at the country club to a dark blue velvet afternoon frock with a deep beige bertha and a rhinestone buckle catching the light in front. We all met again at 4 at a tea given by Mrs. Margaret Carter at Mrs. Louis Burckhardt's home, 3159 N. Pennsylvania St. There we chatted leisurely over the teacups and condoned with Amelia about her cold. Did you ever know a bride who didn't catch a perfectly flimsy cold about three days before the ceremony? Berta Polk, though—she lost her voice completely and was petrified for fear she couldn't manage to gasp out "I do" at the proper place.

Mrs. Edna Martin and Mrs. Arthur T. Cox have just returned from a short visit with Mrs. Turpie Smith at her cottage at Lake Maxinkuckee. Elise Martin, Mrs. Martin's daughter, has an interesting job at the Orchard School this winter, and Louise Geoppe is studying at the art school in preference to going back to Wellesley. I saw Julia Fletcher down at Ayres and I hear she has a job there and is going to be sent down to the Ayres' gift shop at French Lick shortly.
