

Club Halloween Circus Afforded Opportunity for Noting Fashion's Trend

By Josephine Doran

At luncheon or on Saturday evenings at the Indianapolis Athletic Club one always sees a smart crowd of well-dressed Indianapolis women, but never before such a throng of glittering feminine chic as attended the Circus at the club Wednesday, as a Halloween celebration. We guess, when I say this, I mean wrong, to think of the floors of the club were thrown open for dining and dancing and even at that, took superhuman neck-craining to see who was there, because, as a matter of fact, it meant stretching your neck around the shoulder of your next door neighbor. The only place at one time was at the Stevens in Chicago during the Navy-Notre Dame football game.

And fun! Bare back riders, tumblers, clowns, elephants, saw dust ring, silly hats topping sedate heads that never wore anything but a Stetson, horns, marvelous music for dancing, lots of canyons so you could just feel like you were in a tent, and balloons—oh, millions of balloons every place.

Mrs. George Lemcke was there in flowing green chiffon; Mrs. F. O. Marquette in pink chiffon and sequins; Mrs. Marcus Warrender wore a lovely sea green chiffon robe de style; Mrs. R. V. Law was in blue with sequins; Mrs. Harry Rickhardt wore a beautiful black tulle; Mrs. Ray O'Reilly wore white beaded in crystal; Mrs. William J. Coughlin, white splashed all over with gold sequins; Mrs. Ray Fox, black point de esprit; Mrs. Thomas Mahaffey, white beaded in crystal; Mrs. William Baker, red chiffon and Mrs. Richard Hennessey, honey chiffon robe de style.

Among the young set were Miss Cornelia Lemcke in green chiffon, embroidered with peacock feathers; Miss Margaret Denny in royal blue beaded with crystal, with American beauty colored shoes and a flower of the same color on one shoulder; Miss Betty Gould in black chiffon and rhinestones; Miss Evelyn Barnes, black velvet; Miss Imogene Barnes in black chiffon with a stunning gold sequin jacket; Miss Dorothy Clune in black chiffon with rhinestones and Miss Rosemary Clune in yellow tulle robe de style.

And the trend might be taken to be black and more black for evening. Long full skirts. And more circuses.

Again?

Every month, her mother must tell them at the office. Another business girl who has not discovered Midol! Functional disturbance does not interfere with duty when these wonderful tablets are taken. They bring complete ease in five to seven minutes; no matter how difficult a time you've always had! Midol is marvelous. Countless women can tell you. And it is non-narcotic, as any druggist familiar with the formula can assure you. The quick and complete relief is due to its acting directly on the organs affected. Midol is obtainable at any drugstore for fifty cents, in aluminum case.

*Midol's comfort is not confined to any certain days or age. It relieves at any time of life. Its ease is felt in the backache, cramping, hot flashes and all febrile pain peculiar to women.

INDIANAPOLIS WOMAN OWNS BEST SHAWL COLLECTION

At the left Mrs. Archibald Hall wears a Paisley shawl made after a design used by Queen Victoria. At the right, she is wearing a very old Kashmir, presented by an Indian prince to her cousin, a Polish noblewoman.

The largest authentic collection of shawls in America is owned by Mrs. Archibald Hall, at the Denison hotel. It includes every valuable type, from the Kashmir to the Paisley, and every shawl in it is a museum piece, which is to say it is rare, valuable and hand made.

The Kashmir is the oldest of all shawls. Color pieces in the design are woven separately, and then embroidered together by hand. The most intricate specimen in Mrs. Hall's collection required the entire time of twelve men for more than a year in its making. The later shawls of France and Paisley and Scotland, are imitations; they reproduce the Oriental designs in either weaving or printing.

Mrs. Hall is the highest authority on shawls in the United States. Specimens are frequently sent to her from museums for estimates of their value, and she has been invited to inspect shawls in the Metropolitan Museum, New York.

Better Than Museum Group
Her collection includes numerous specimens not found in the Cincinnati Museum, said to have the finest museum collection in America. It has five distinct types not found there.

In the illustration Mrs. Hall is shown at the left in a Paisley shawl of a design that was used in a shawl made for Queen Victoria. It is unusual in having but one color, a soft slate blue with a white ground. At the right Mrs. Hall wears a fine Kashmir which was presented to her cousin, the wife of a Polish nobleman, by an Indian prince.

The oldest shawl in the collection of which the date is known was made for a Spanish noble family in the early sixteenth century, by a Frenchman who managed cleverly to embody French insignia and figures as well as his own name in the design.

The figure in the two sides at close range is a river flowing back of a garden. Held at a distance, however, it becomes a human face, and laid on a floor or table it looks like a lion.

Distance Changes Design
In the face a bridge forms the forehead, and the eyes are water in which are swans. The figures of the swans are hardly a half inch long, and yet so delicate is the weaving that their reflections in the water are clearly visible. The pier forms the nose, and the upper lip is a boat—the family crest. Foliage of the garden and human figures sitting around it made the beard. The end design is an apple-picking scene.

The corners are Louis XIV in design, surrounded by Moorish prayer arches in which the weaver embodied the French fleur de lys.

Mrs. Hall has three lectures which she is frequently called upon to deliver. They are "Shawls from the Orient from Early Sixteenth Century to 1869," "Shawls My Grandmother Wore" and "The Joys of Shawl Collecting."

Prescribing Remedy for Bad Temper

BY MARTHA LEE

My readers have responded well to the enigma of Wondering Sue. If you remember, she is the young woman who has a husband with one of those frightful tempers that stops at nothing once he is crossed. He is perfectly capable of bouncing a cast iron stove off the head of the nearest "hoo-man," not excepting his own wife or his own boss.

Poor Wondering Sue is just about done up after five years of dodging, first incidents that might lead to a temper and later a flock of tea cups, chair legs and baseball bats. She is in a miserable state of health from it all and doesn't know which way to turn.

My readers have heard her cry for help through reading the column and have sent messages of condolence, but mostly some good sound advice for Sue to try out. Strangely enough, most of the readers have come to the same conclusion. That it is not, nor has it been, Sue who needs a doctor, but her husband. He needs a little mental adjustment, a few treatments for a case of bad nerves and not only his disposition but his health will improve, and after all, the one is so interdependent upon the other that they might even be called synonymous.

One reader writes:
Dear Miss Lee: For the woman whose husband suffers from a violent case of temper, or vice versa, I have this to offer. Every time a person indulges in this evil, he is simply filling himself with a nice little dose of poison and the effects will show up sooner or later. Noted physicians declare that anger will arrest digestion, cause cerebral congestion, disturb the kidneys and the heart. "The emotions of rage and hate take a definite toll of years from the life of man and produce actual acid conditions in the body." I read this in the Sept. 28 edition of The Indianapolis Times and it was written by Dr. Roemer, Waukegan, Ill.

Another reader writes:
Dear Miss Lee: In regard to the problem of Wondering Sue. Her husband is a sick man and is badly in need of a thorough physical going-over and a good nerve tonic. A temper like that is an illness, not a natural condition at all. Wondering Sue's health has been affected by the carelessness of her husband in caring for his own. I should advise her to get to such a doctor as the column occasionally and happened upon this article says:

Dear Miss Lee: I am an occasional reader of your column. The letter from Wondering Sue drew my interest. Partially quelling from your response "a perfect sensible and normal person can restrain fits of temper." Perhaps it has not occurred to this wife that her husband is not normal in his outbursts of temper.

It is evident there is something wrong in his actions. She desires, and rightly, to search for the trouble. Most people are aware of the fact that a baby is reasonably happy and contented if he feels well. On the other hand, if he is physically distressed, he cries. Why then would it not be reasonable to presume that outbursts on the part of Wondering Sue's husband are not the result of ill health.

If the wife knows he is nervous, which is far worse than being sick in bed, it is her duty to make him see a doctor. If he does not, and his case grows worse as she says it has, he may soon be a case for mental observation.

If he will not see a doctor himself, Wondering Sue should consult some one herself, state the case and take the suggestions offered.
