

MIDNIGHT OWLS TO GET VIEW OF MOON ECLIPSE

Luna to Enter Shadow of Earth at 12:25 Tuesday Morning.

By Science Service

Amateur astronomers and other night owls will have a good excuse for staying up after midnight tonight to see an eclipse. The moon is scheduled to enter the shadow of the earth, and partially disappear from the sight of the curious at 2:39 Tuesday morning. At that time it will assume the dull, coppery-red color characteristic of the eclipsed moon.

At 12:25 a.m. the first phase of the eclipse commences, but for some time after that will there be noticeable effect. The earth's shadow, extending out into space on the side opposite the sun, is divided into two parts. The inner, and darker, part is called the umbra. To a person within the sun would be completely covered. Outside this is the penumbra.

Starts at 12:25

In it the imaginary observer would see part of the sun. If he were near the umbra, he would only see a little slice of the sun's edge, the farther from the center he was, the more of the sun he would see.

It is the penumbra that the moon enters at 12:25. All during the evening it will be full. At 12:25 it will begin to enter the shadow of our planet. About an hour later, at 1:24, the moon will begin to enter the umbra. By that time the southeast edge of the moon will begin to darken.

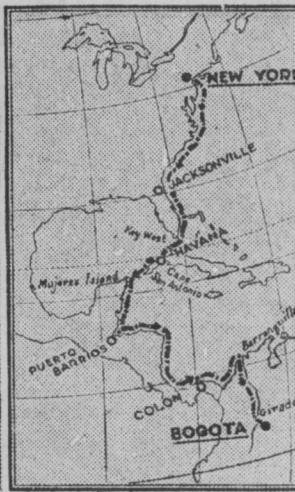

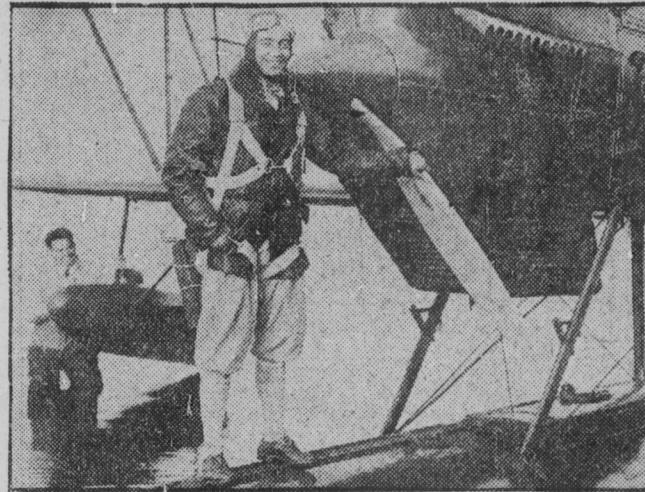

When 3:39 arrives, the moon will be engulfed. Then it probably will appear reddish in color, because some light of the sun is bent around and into the umbra by the earth's atmosphere. As the red light passes through thick layers of atmosphere most easily, the eclipsed moon is apt to be of a coppery-red color.

Leaves Shadow at 5:58

Total phase of the eclipse ends at 5:58. Then the moon starts to emerge from the umbra, and the northeastern edge of the moon begins to brighten again. By 5:33 the moon completely has emerged from the inner shadow and appears almost as bright as ordinarily.

Finally, by 5:38, it will have left the entire shadow. As the sun will be nearly up by that time, the morning twilight will hamper astronomical observations. The observer really might just as well return to his warm bed after the end of the total phase.

Colombian Ace on Southern Flight

Benjamin Mendez, ace of the Colombian army air corps, here is shown on a pontoon of his seaplane before he set out from Rockaway Naval Air station, Long Island, on the first leg of his 4,600-mile flight to Bogota. His ship, bought largely by popular subscription in Colombia and named "Ricarate" for a celebrated patriot of that country, is a 435-horsepower Curtiss seaplane. At the right is a map of his itinerary, with stops at Jacksonville, Fla., Havana, Puerto Barrios, Colon, thence following the waterways to Bogota.

Mooney Release Sought by Civil Liberties Union.

By Times Special

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—Norman Hapgood, Lemuel Parton, Henry T. Hunt and Morris L. Ernst have been named by Dr. Harry F. Ward, chairman of the American Civil Liberties Union, to serve on a committee which will recommend members for the national and executive committees formed to organize the country-wide campaign to free Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings from California prisons.

Other officers are: John Hano, first vice-commander; Jesse Rodman, second vice-commander; Paul Fechman, finance officer; S. H. Fletcher, chaplain; Raymond Monaghan, sergeant-at-arms; Clara M. Hunt, historian, and Sidney Mahowitz, adjutant.

Post executive committee: Joseph Buning, John Hilkere, Donald Hoover and V. M. Armstrong. Seventh district delegates and alternates: Mrs. Charles W. Bridges, wife of a Clinton county farmer, is in hospital here suffering from a fractured leg resulting when a barn door was blown against her by a high wind.
