

Matrix Table Banquet Set for Dec. 11

A new tradition, the "absolute absolute" of what forms the social, intellectual, artistic and personable "400" of Butler university femininity, will be a reality Tuesday, Dec. 11, when the first annual formal banquet of the Matrix Table will be held at the Marot hotel.

The local chapter of Theta Sigma Phi, national women's journalistic fraternity, feeling that the Matrix Table, a tradition at practically every other co-educational institution, had been neglected long enough, has sponsored its installation at Butler.

The flower of the junior and senior girls, those who have scintillated in their various fields, will receive invitations to sit at the Matrix Table. A few outstanding sophomores will also be admitted.

HELLO, TURKEY—HERE'S HOW

Sister Mary Gives Some Carving Points

WHEN the turkey appears as the crowning glory to the Thanksgiving dinner the man of the house must take the center of the stage. The wise host will make a trip to the kitchen before the bird is trussed and inform himself of its general anatomy. The average American man does not carve a turkey many times during the year and if he understands the position of its joints and the direction in which the muscular fibers run, half the battle is won. So the more information he can gather before the festive occasion the easier will be the ceremony.

There are several little things the cook can do to assist the carver. First relieve the host of part of his duties for the day by letting some member of the party who sits next to him serve the vegetables. He will, of course, serve the dressing and if a maid is not in attendance may serve the gravy over the dressing.

In the second place be sure the platter on which the turkey is placed is large enough. Unless the carver is an expert on small platters placed at his left on which he may put the legs and wings as he removes them will make the carving much easier.

Side Toward Carver
And in the last place put the platter directly in front of the carver with the side of the turkey toward him, the drumsticks to the right and the neck to the left. Place the carving fork at the left outside and above the host's personal silver and steel and carving knife at relatively the same place at the right.

With the stage all set the host can attack the deliciously glazed, golden brown bird.

Insert the carving fork firmly in the center of the breast bone at its highest point. First cut off the second joint and drumstick in one piece making a circular cut around the joint close to the body. With the blade of the knife force the leg back and cut the ligaments holding the thigh bone to the body. With another fork remove the piece to the smaller platter. Provided, or if, the turkey platter is large enough let it stay by the side of the turkey. Remove the wing on the same side in the same way, making a circular cut around the joint close to the body. Without removing the fork cut the thin slices lengthwise from the breast, beginning close to the place where the wing was removed. Work up to the ridge of the breast, keeping the slices thin and parallel to the breast bone.

Cut Parallel to Bone
For the first time the carving fork is removed. Separate the second joint and drumstick, cutting the flesh to the joint, pressing the joint apart with the blade of the knife and cutting through the ligaments. Cut the meat from the second joint and drumstick in neat pieces, cutting parallel to the bone.

Make a wide incision in the apron for serving the stuffing. Unless you are sure that the whole turkey will be needed for the first serving carve only one side at first and serve it before carving the second side.

Serve a piece of white meat and one of dark meat with some of the stuffing on each plate.

A roast chicken is carved in the same way as the turkey with the exception of the legs. These are not so large and are usually served the whole second joint or drumstick for a portion.

The carving knife must be very sharp for the breast of turkey is quite dry and almost crumbly in texture and neat thin slices can't be made unless the knife cuts without pressure.

Taylor-Skillman
Announcement is made of the marriage Saturday of Miss Naomi Skillman, daughter of Mrs. Dora Skillman, Anderson, and Arthur Taylor, son of Mrs. Margaret Taylor, Elwood.

Club to Meet
Miss Helen Reidy, 1002 Elm street, will be hostess this evening for the regular meeting of Alpha Chapter, So-Fra Club. All pledges must be present.

Slights in Childhood Hurt Most

BY MARTHA LEE

The problems and heart break of childhood, so different, so incomprehensible to older folk, are sometimes so deep and most lasting of all. A snub, a thoughtless slighting remark, a misdirected bit of teasing or sarcasm may mean more to a child than a faithless sweetheart or an unrequited love will in later years.

I have stressed so many times the astounding growth of false standards of values that is sweeping the country today. Now, more than ever before, money is becoming the one standard by which all things are judged.

Time Will Cure

When one is older, and more sensible, one has enough self-preserving instincts to guard one's feelings. A man who is poor does not seek out the company of those who will show him up unfavorably in contrast of wealth, education, polish, travel. He chooses those of his own group as his friends, not because he does or does not want to, but because he has learned that which is best for him.

A child, however, is in a different position. Every day, for nine months, he is, through the public school, thrown in contact with the children of those more financially fortunate than his own father. He is made to see that his books are dog eared and second-hand, while his school mates have new books with shiny covers and smooth pages. And there isn't a bigger thrill when you are ten than having a brand new school book. His stub of a pencil is in sharp contrast to the red box, filled with pencils and erasers that are in front of him. His ragged trousers and flannel shirt, his scuffed shoes and all too frequently dirty sweater are a poor showing against the appearance of the other children of his class.

Inferiority May Last

A child feels these things. Because everywhere he goes, he is impressed with the importance of looking and acting and having things like the other children do, he very often acquires an inferiority complex, or else a swaggering bold attitude to hide his embarrassment and realization that things are different for him.

I have a letter from a girl who is feeling at an early age, the differences money can make in this world. Even at thirteen she is bitter against the order of things:

Dear Miss Lee—I am 13 and a freshman in high school. My parents are very poor and I am one of five children. I have been a sacrifice for them to keep me in school. I know, to buy my books, even though they were second-hand, and to keep me in car fare, I have been fairly bright in school, having always passed with good grades.

I have no clothes excepting a dress to wear to school, and old coat and hat and some nondescript shoes. Practically all of the girls at my school are well dressed and have fun, talking to their classmates and planning little parties and things. I might have the leprosy for all the attention I get. I think I could act, but am not asked to join the clubs. I can play basketball pretty well, but I haven't any time to go out, as I must go home after school and do housework. I am fairly good looking, but no one ever pays any attention to me.

I am much braver in my classes than some of the others, but even that does not make any difference. I want to finish my education, because I have no intentions of living in poverty. I have been brought up in it. I did not used to mind it, because in spite of all the struggles, we have been quite happy. But now I dread it. When you are so poor you might just as well get off by yourself, for all the chance you have. It's such a struggle to continue in the face of the slights one receives when one's dress is in its fourth year of wear, not to go on one's own else, and one's coat looks just what it is, a cheap one cut down to fit.

PLAIN JANE.
You asked no question, my dear, but I am sure you wanted me to tell you to keep right on going. If you have only one dress, you can keep it clean, and cleanliness does a great deal for one's self-respect. Poverty is inconvenient, but surely nothing disgraceful.

You should be proud of your mother and father, to think that they have made the sacrifices for you that you might have the chances they never had. They are trying to help you. Stick to your clothes that you need so badly right now. In order that you look like the others, is nothing at all in comparison to what your education will mean to you later.

You have a certain pride that must make you walk with your head up high and a beautiful carriage is worth fifteen dresses. Try to remember you have your attractions, but because your schoolmates are very young and very sheltered and very superficial, they do not see them. Later on, everything will be different.

ENSEMBLE

This stunning new necklace and bracelet ensemble is designed by Lelong in ivory and onyx for afternoon wear.

The bridal colors, shades of pink, were used in appointments and decorations. Pink roses in crystal vases and pink tapers in crystal holders were used on the tables at serving time.

Guests with Miss Hamlin and Mr. Walker were: Messrs. and Mesdames Taylor Obid, Charles Walker, Walter Hiser, Wilbur Appel, Wood Carnes Moll, David Miller and Frank Walker; Mesdames Hubbard Hathaway and U. A. Lyle; Misses Rosemary Bosson, Virginia Curtis and Dorothy Walker; Messrs. Thomas McNutt, Richard Appel and Garvin Bassett.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Lister, 2608 Broadway, will entertain with a bridal dinner in honor of their daughter and Mr. Walker Wednesday evening.

YOUR CHILD Must Bow to Many Rules

BY OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

"Look here," said Ted's father to Ted's mother, "every time I tell him to do something he answers that you've given him other orders. I distinctly told him this morning to carry the rest of those screens to the back porch down to the cellar. And they're still there. He says you told him not to touch them."

"Yes, I did," answered Ted's mother with asperity. "He had a shirt on that he can wear to school tomorrow. If he touched those screens it would have meant another clean one. My ironings are big enough."

"He could have put on something old, couldn't he?"

"It was almost dark when he came home, and he was tired."

"I see," said Ted's father, knowing it was no use to argue.

Ted's teacher gave the class night-work. The fall evenings were long and frosty and the exemption she had given them as long as outdoor play was possible was at an end.

"Darn these old books," growled Ted bashing his arithmetic on the table. "I've got about a million problems to do."

"It's a shame!" declared his mother. "You work all day in school and you shouldn't have to ruin your eyes at night."

"How many problems have you, Ted?" asked his father.

"When did you get home?"

"About 5:30. We were playing ball."

"Well, you've had your exercise and a good supper. An hour should see you through those lessons. It's a quarter to seven. Then you'll have an hour to read a story before bed. I guess your nightwork won't kill you."

"That's the way you are, Tom!" indignantly shot out Ted's mother. "The minute I show the child a little sympathy you take the other side."

"No such thing," defended his father. "I'm trying to make him buck up and do what he's told."

"Take the teacher's part. That's right. My word doesn't count for a thing in this house."

If Ted grows into a law-abiding citizen he won't have his mother to thank. She won't allow him to bow to any authority but her own. Children, like grown-ups, have more masters than their parents. Mothers should realize the necessity for obedience to other laws than their own.

On the street children must do what city laws say. In school they are under the teacher. And at home they owe as much obedience to fathers as to mothers. It is not a one-master world for any of us.

Clean Globes
Electric light globes that are discolored can be cleaned by soaking an hour in warm water with soda or borax in it. Then put them into fresh warm water with a little ammonia and wash well with a cloth.

FOR AFTERNOON

An afternoon ensemble any wardrobe would welcome is of green velvet, with pekin trim. Different blouses change its character.

Old Folks Say Doctor Caldwell was Right

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice, known to druggists and the public as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Then, the treatment of constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions that result from constipation was entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which is a combination of senna and other mild laxative herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you, and the better for the general health of all. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will last a family several months, and all can use it. It is good for the baby because pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. In proper dose, given in the directions, is equally effective at all ages. Elderly people will find it especially ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write your name and address in the special coupon you see at the end of this announcement, and send for a bottle to try. This complimentary bottle is forwarded, prepaid without charge of any kind.
