

'CHI' NIGHT LIFE IS HARD HIT BY SWEEPING RAIDS

Underworld Worried for Fear Law Really Means
Business.

By United Press
CHICAGO, Nov. 30.—Chicago today was having its greatest cleanup campaign in history.

Authorities were taking liquor and gambling devices away from proprietors of beer flats, speakeasies, and cafes at such an alarming rate that some of the latter were almost convinced the campaign was taken seriously.

Some 325 Chicagoans were interrupted in their Thanksgiving festivities by concerted police drive on night clubs, and gambling houses.

Ordinarily "drives" by the city police do not cause a great deal of consternation among bootleggers and gamblers here. Past experience has shown that the rurore generally dies down in a few days.

Women Not Spared

This time, however, other factors must be reckoned with.

Next week marks the induction into office of John A. Swanson, new state's attorney and a new staff of prosecutors.

The humble beer flat, which sells home brew to augment the family income, also suffered heavily, 127 of the raid victims coming from those sources.

Neither were women immune. If they were in the flats or saloons at raiding time they went to the station along with the men.

"It won't last," is the word going about the anti-Volstead circles, but there were a lot of tongues in a lot of cheeks when it was repeated.

Not So Amusing Now

With a new sheriff, John Traeger, in office promising to clean up the roadhouses in the county and Judge Swanson on the horizon, there was doubt in the tone of the erstwhile pat saying.

Swanson is sworn to rid the city of gangsters, racketeers and bootleggers. He was elected on that platform and in a half dozen statements since has emphasized that he appreciates the responsibility.

Thus when the bartenders, gamekeepers and beer flat operators were taken to police stations all over the city after the raids, the customary cynical smiles were absent.

The "big shots" weren't on hand to provide bail and wield their influence. They were having troubles of their own.

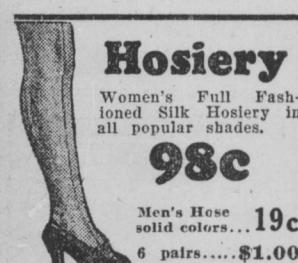

Some of them are reported to have left town to establish headquarters on the edge of the city, out of the jurisdiction of the new state's attorney, but still near enough to carry on their business here.

Shoes . . . for the Well-dressed Family

Kinney styles are what fashion demands . . . Kinney prices are what customers have a right to demand

Women's Patent One-Straps, snake strap with novel buckle, Cuban heel.

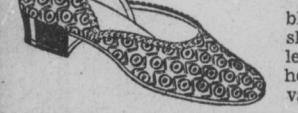

Women's Full Fashioned Silk Hosiery in all popular shades.

Men's Hose solid colors . . . 19¢ 6 pairs . . . $1.00

Infants' Patent Leather Boot trimmed with Fauxfitch. Nuway Welt construction. Sizes 2-5.

Men's Black Dress Oxford. Storm Welt construction. Rubber Heel.

EXTRA SPECIAL

Woman's black, blue or rose satin slippers. Soft leather sole. Wood heel. Regular $1.50 value.

Prices make 2 Pairs Possible

Kinney Shoes

OVER 300 FAMILY STORES G.R. KINNEY CO. 5 BIG FACTORIES

Shoes for the Whole Family

24 North Pennsylvania

Open Saturday Evening

Free Bridge Book Coupon

As a follower of the 1928-29 season of bridge by radio, the bearer of this coupon is entitled to one copy of the book, "Easy Lessons in Auction Bridge," free, when the coupon is presented at the store of the Indianapolis Power and Light Company, Meridian and Washington streets. The book is given with the compliments of The Times and Radio Station WFBM.

Name _____
Address _____

ARRAIGNMENT OF M'MANUS HELD UP; JAIL BUDDY

Accused of Rothstein Slaying He Pays Youth's Fine; Ignores Charge.

By United Press
NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—Formal arraignment of George McManus for the murder of Arnold Rothstein was continued today until next Wednesday, with consent of the stocky gambler and his attorneys.

Meanwhile, "Tough Willie" McCabe, another of the gambling fraternity, surrendered to police today.

He was held as a material witness under $10,000 bail. He will make bail later today and be released, to reappear next week.

Under the affidavit filed against McManus Tuesday, the formal arraignment had to come within forty-eight hours. The time was extended to today an account of Thanksgiving and McManus agreed to further extension as the district attorney's office requested.

McManus was slightly nervous when he appeared before Judge Mancuso in general sessions, but did show some of the confidence and cockiness he generally exhibits. As usual he had little to say.

While McManus was appearing before Judge Mancuso, the county grand jury was meeting in a room two flights over Mancuso's courtroom in an attempt to bring the three indictments authorities believed would be forthcoming, one of them against McManus.

While McManus was in the homicide court building he saw Salvatore Salidano and asked him:

"What are you in for, kid?"

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked away without asking for his change.

The youth explained he was serving a two-days' sentence in lieu of a $5 fine for improper parking.

McManus grunted, reached in his pocket, pulled out a great roll of bills and tossed a $50 bill to a patrolman.

"Pay the kid's fine," he said.

He walked