GROUP OF HATS FASHION APPROVES

1—A plain felt hat with a slightly irregular brim with a strip of felt and finished off with a fancy buckle. The model is made in beige and the ornament is gold and brown to harmonize with the morning suit it accompanied.

2—Soft black panne needs little trimming. A bunch of crosses or aligrettes makes it a very dressy afternoon hat or even a restaurant hat. It would be just the thing for one of the new lace dresses.

3—This muff ensemble is made of black felt and a very supple fur called "gaya." It is smart on a black velvet afternoon suit.

4—Black felt lined with black velvet with a supple, undulating brim is trimmed with a green feather.

5—A beige and white chime felt and velvet combination. A huge velvet rose lends a very soft touch to the whole ensemble.

About Love for Friend's Chosen Girl

BY MARTHA LEE

Pity the poor young fellow who is in love with his best friend's girl. There is practically nothing he can do but take the "forget cure." It's a hard thing to take, but most effective in nine cases out of ten. That's the idea after all—results.

As a general rule, if fellows are good buddies they have an admiration for a few of the same things and a lot of ideas in common. And one of the most frequent of these is the idea about girls. As a consequence, they often like the same girls. And that is just too bad, especially when it narrows down to one.

It's pretty tough on both of them but most especially on the girl when she must make a choice. The whole world is the fellow who lost out usually idealizes about the girl and decides she is the only one in the world like that, so he had just better settle himself back in a nice easy chair and become a bachelorette.

And there we get back to this living with a ghost stuff. It just isn't healthy. There really are other "swell" girls in the world, maybe even "sweller" than his buddy's sweetheart. The only thing to do is play that old game of snatching out of things.

A chap who shelves himself from the rest of the world because his first love affair, or imagined love affair, goes on the rocks; a fellow who puts himself absolutely out of circulation is giving himself a pretty bad deal.

Dear Miss Lee—I am 26 years old, and I'm sure you will think after reading this letter that I am old enough to know better.

I have a buddy who has been my best friend ever since I can remember. We have gone all through school together, taken our vacations together, read the same books and exchanged ideas ever since we were knee-high.

Our ideas about things have been pretty much the same about most, just different in some small points to make our friendship interesting with consequences once in a while.

We have gone with the same crowd for years, and for years both of us have been very fond of the same girl. She has been our ideal. Recently we have both become serious with her, and of course I was left holding the sack. She liked my friend the best. For which I do not blame her, but I feel that with everything was over for me. I have been around a lot and have met a large number of girls and she is the only one who ever interested me.

Is there any answer to a problem like that? I feel as though my sadness about the whole thing shows so plainly in my face that I am rather spoiling things for my other two friends.

Of course, there is an answer. You have never looked up any other girl as a prospective wife, because you have been too much wrapped up in this one girl.

Get around with your friends and begin looking the others over, not to find where they fail in comparison to this other girl, who is as much as dead to you now, but to find where they excel her.

You will not only be doing your self a favor, but you will be making a gracious gesture for your two friends whom you seem to love so dearly. It is a terrible detriment to complete happiness to feel that you have snatched it out of the hands of your best friend, and as long as you brood about it that is all the way you can feel.

Betty didn't answer. She was inside her coat by this time, Grabbing up her tam, she tore out of the door.

In a second she was back. "Mother, Mother! There goes Jim. He's going down the street. Now can I go in?"

Her mother looked out dubiously. Yes, there was Jim bundled up, head down, and walking very slowly.

A sick-looking Jim, but Jim anyway. As it happened he was heading for the drug store at the corner.

"Well, just a peep at Dorothy's playthings," she conceded. "Don't stay, come right home. You know that house is fit of flu."

Betty stayed an hour. Jim came back and went to bed. Dorothy, too, was sniffing and coughing.

Betty took influenza; so did her parents.

When parents say "no," it should mean no and not maybe. Don't allow children to coax. If you do, your authority and better judgment are undermined from the beginning.

So many are the uses to which aluminum has come to be applied in industry that it has come to be known as "the modern metal."

Fashion in First Hint for Spring

ENGAGED

Miss Katherine Green

Chic models clad in beach pajamas to delight the eyes of a connoisseur paraded in an exotic stage setting, redolent of tropical breezes, to baffle the wintry blasts outside, at the spring style show at the William H. Block Company store today.

To be smart this season milady, when lounging around the beach or flirting with the bold, bad waves, must wear one of the new outifts of bathing suit and coat to match. All suits shown are backless, much to the satisfaction of the devotee who wishes to acquire a coat of red tan to match the sun-tan complexion now demanded by fashion.

An imported suit in brown with yarn-embroidered design, and coat of brown linen decorated in a hand-blocked pattern to match, was the outstanding hit of beach wear.

Most important of the whole collection was a sports costume from Hattie Carnegie. The dress was of white crepe and sleeveless and of course had the new "sun-back" that is indispensable this year. The trimmings were in sulphur and blue, with matching hip-length coat.

A feature of this year's show is that all the costumes, or most all of them, have coats included in the ensemble. Dresses for the most part are sleeveless.

All cotton fabrics are very smart this season, running for the greater part to printed ginghams, handkerchief plain, plain linen and pique.

The colors decreed this season are white, as the most important, white with a color, and all shade of off white. These shades have been chosen on account of the case with which they blend with a sun tan, either natural or otherwise.
