

DEBT EXPERTS HOPE TO WIN OVER BRITISH

Parley Is Calm Despite
Churchill's Attack on Young's Plan.

BY SAMUEL DASHIELL
United Press Staff Correspondent
PARIS, May 10.—In spite of the reaction in Great Britain against the compromise plan conceived by Owen D. Young for a settlement of the reparations dispute between Germany and the allied creditor nations, an air of calm prevailed over the conference of experts today and the negotiations were resumed as if nothing had happened across the English channel.

To be sure, the speech against the Young project delivered in the House of Commons in London by Winston Churchill, British chancellor of the exchequer, was studied with a great degree of seriousness by all the delegates to the committee of experts.

But the general feeling today was that greater storms had been weathered by the conference before this, greater obstacles had been overcome and that there was nothing to get excited about.

While it was admitted in official quarters that a crisis existed, or was approaching, it was emphasized that the chief points of the current dispute do not touch upon the main agreement between the principals, Germany and the allies.

The British merely object to Young's revision of the Spa agreement, and it is hoped that this phase of the negotiations will be straightened out satisfactorily among the allies themselves.

The British claim that under the Young compromise plan they would get just enough reparations to pay their war debt to the United States and that their surplus after this payment would be zero.

It was believed, however, that the Britons would be willing to sign an annuities agreement as between the allied powers and Germany and then, at a later conference among the allies themselves, sign a separate agreement as to the amount of reparations to be allotted to Great Britain.

ADVERTISING URGED IN BUSINESS COMPETITION

Chicago Man Stresses Need to City Club.

Competition in "big business" is met by advertising, it was emphasized Thursday noon by Edward T. Miller, Chicago, International Advertising Association convention manager, in an address before the Advertising Club of Indianapolis at the Columbia Club.

"Keen business minds no longer debate whether it pays to advertise, but they are asking how much can be spent in certain territory," he said.

"We have had a 'buyers market' since 1922 and the new competition is making it necessary for more and better advertising," Miller declared.

Thomas McQuiston, his wife, and Everett Johnson, were arrested at 1227 Park avenue when the raiding party found several quarts of whisky and gin in a trunk in the basement, alleged to belong to McQuiston.
