

INDIANA FIELD EXAMINERS END SESSION TODAY

Election to Close Meeting; Banquet High Light of Gathering.

One of the chief-beneficial effects of the board of accounts is the moral effect it has on public office holders, Archie Bobbitt, state auditor, told board of accounts field examiners in their second day's session in the senate chamber today.

The annual two-day meeting was to close this afternoon with election of officers of the field examiners association.

A social high light of the gathering was the annual dinner Monday night at the Indianapolis Athletic Club. Sixty-five field examiners, former field examiners and guests attended.

The program was informal and presided over by Lawrence F. Orr, chief examiner, as toastmaster, and President Tracy Whitaker of the association.

A movement for paid vacations for field examiners, such as prevail in other governmental departments, was suggested by some of the examiner speakers.

W. P. Cosgrove, field examiner, stressed the importance of Governor Harry G. Leslie's announcement that no relief could be expected from the chief executive in the case a crooked public official was brought to bar by the examiners.

He also cited the good effect of adequate newspaper publicity regarding examiners' reports.

At the speakers' table were L. O. Chasey, secretary to the Governor; Gaylord Morton, assistant secretary; Ray D. Emerson, managing editor of the Indianapolis News; Boyd Gurley, editor of The Indianapolis Times; James A. Stuart, managing editor of the Indianapolis Star, and Senator Luther O. Draper, Spiceland, of the state budget committee, all of whom spoke.

Among other speakers were Fred T. Gladwin, newly elected Marion county school superintendent; Thomas D. Barr, assistant state banking commissioner; Greenberry Lowe, deputy chief examiner; A. C. McDaniel, state budget clerk, and Harry Boggs.

Annapolis' Pride

GIRL, 3, TAKES DOG ON JAUNT; WANDERS MILE

Police Double as Cowboys to Round Up Hogs; Cattle Escape.

If it's true "he travels fastest who travels alone," it's hard telling how far from her home at 1261 Bancroft street Marjorie Throm, 3, might have been today, but for her "puppy-dog" Flip.

When Marjorie and Flip disappeared from the yard of the Throm home Monday afternoon neighbors scoured the neighborhood.

An hour's search was fruitless. Another hour and the search extended south eight blocks to Michigan street. Surely, searchers thought, the 3-year-old girl had not dared cross that heavily traversed street.

At 7:30 Marjorie's father, Earl Throm, called police. Shortly after she was found sauntering along Emerson avenue with Flip, south of New York street, more than a mile from home, a bit tired, of course, but not the least bit worried.

VALPARAISO, Ind., June 3.—Charged with the murder of Miss Camelia Soutar, 24, Chicago divorcee, Mrs. Catherine Cassier, 40, is held in the Porter county jail here.

When Marjorie and Flip disappeared from the yard of the Throm home Monday afternoon neighbors scoured the neighborhood.

An hour's search was fruitless. Another hour and the search extended south eight blocks to Michigan street. Surely, searchers thought, the 3-year-old girl had not dared cross that heavily traversed street.

At the end of more than six hours' argument by attorneys Monday afternoon, Dunlavy took the matter under advisement. Hereto-fore, he had indicated that he would lend all possible speed to the case.

The suit, filed by Clinton H. Givan, attorney for Clifford Keane, supporter of George V. Coffin, city and district Republican chairman, seeks to halt preparations for holding a manager election November 5. City manager attorneys filed a demurrer attacking the points of alleged unconstitutionality of the law as set out in the complaint and asking that the injunction not be granted.

Sumner Clancy, attorney opposed to the law, said the present city manager law with its amendments was a "monumental piece of legislative patchwork." He said the law is void because of the attempt to enact a law.
