

Men Cheer Spankings for Wives

By MRS. WALTER FERGUSON

Cheer up, men! In the staid old city of Baltimore a husband has been freed by the judge after he was arrested and confessed to giving his wife a good old-fashioned spanking.

He was moved to this act by the fact that when he came home one evening there was neither wife nor dinner waiting for him.

Some years ago such procedure was very common. If wives did not obey, and obey instantly, they were knocked about by husbandly fists until they decided it was best to do so.

Men quoted the old verse to one another and taught it to their sons: "A woman, a dog and a walnut tree, The more you beat 'em, the better they be."

And in order to keep the women always up to par, so far as humility and goodness were concerned, men often prided themselves upon their fine ability to discipline their wives.

Women Need Beatings?

Black eyes were not unusual things in those days, although they did not get into the newspapers. Many a wife went about half the time wearing such facial decoration which the masterly hand of a fond husband had bestowed on her.

One of the "God-given authorities" we hear so much about was the right to black your wife's eye whenever the impulse hit you.

Some of our great psychologists and philosophers now assert that this is what's the matter with modern woman; she isn't knocked about enough for her own good. She has grown soft and, therefore, arrogant and uppish.

They say that women were much happier when the wife trembled at the sound of a heavy male footstep at eventide, and that we are all at heart slaves and love the hands that lash us.

Restrain Yourselves, Men.

All of which may be sound psychology and philosophy, but it is not common sense. And I advise the men to go warily about taking it up.

Remember that "one swallow does not make a summer," and that "all it is not gold that glitters," and that "Hell hath no fury like a woman spanked."

Do not encourage yourselves too much by this news note. All judges may not be so lenient, and what's more, all wives may not be as easy as this Baltimore spouse.

Give three rousing cheers for her husband if you will, but restrain yourselves from emulating his example. I beseech you. Good Sirs.

YOUR CHILDREN Don't Openly Discuss Child

By OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

She was a quiet little curly-headed of 3, serious and detached as an absent-minded college professor. One wouldn't have dreamed that the conversation was making the slightest scratch of an impression on her small mind.

She sat on the top step nursing her doll and watching traffic go by. Her grandmother and mother were talking about her quite frankly as though she were some interesting specimen.

I looked warningly in her direction. Under those soft curls were two ears, and under certain circumstances ears can jump to alarming proportions.

"She can't hear," said her mother. "She doesn't know we're talking about her."

Something Must Be Done!

"Well, as I was saying," went on Grandma to me, "I just told Laura here that none of my children sucked their thumbs, and if she doesn't do something about it, Jeanette is going to spoil the shape of her mouth."

"And I tell you, Mother, that I do never did it and it worries me terribly. She's so different from them in every way. I've snatched her hands and tied them up and—Why, what's the matter, darling?"

Jeanette was crying. She hadn't moved and still held her doll, but great sobs were shaking her tiny shoulders and enormous tears were rolling down on her little print dress.

"She's crying because I said she sucked her thumb," said Grandma. Jeanette cried harder.

"Come here," coaxed her mother. "Come over here to me."

"No!"

"Don't be a cry-baby. Shame on you," said Grandma.

"I'm not a cry-baby! I'm not," and she stamped her foot.

"Jeanette, come here," commanded her mother. "Come here when I tell you. What's wrong?"

"If you don't stop crying we'll put Geraldine in the attic," said Grandma. Geraldine was her doll.

Doubly Unpleasant

A threat added to an injury. Between them they had produced an effect, absolutely natural in a sensitive alert child, and then producing it tried to stop their own handiwork by threatening punishment.

Children can't stand criticism before strangers. They hear more than we think. And it isn't the way to cure them of unlucky habits. It isn't often that we can shame a little child out of his habits started in babyhood.

If we do try, it shouldn't be done in public. As for the thumb-sucking, Jeanette should have been cured of it before she was 3 years old.

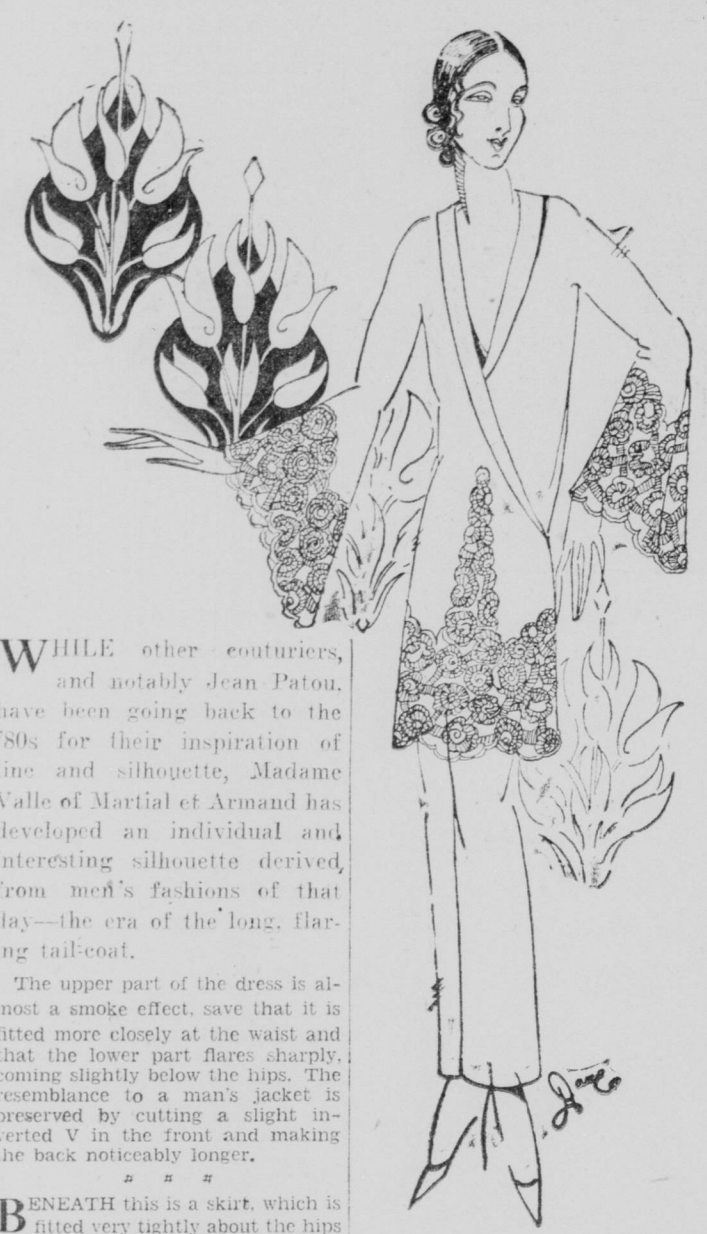

One of the worst things we can do is to discuss children in their hearing. For they usually hear whether we think they do or not.

Cotton Jackets

Little jackets of gingham, pique and cretonne are quite as smart as silk and often more colorful, for beach, tennis court and other sports wear.

Interprets the MODE

A graceful pajama suit in mauve satin, with rich embroidery of the same color on the fore sleeves and bottom of coat. (Courtesy of Drecoll-Beer, Paris.)

WHILE other couturiers, and notably Jean Patou, have been going back to the '80s for their inspiration of line and silhouette, Madame Valle of Marital et Armand has developed an individual and interesting silhouette derived from men's fashions of that day—the era of the long, flaring tail-coat.

The upper part of the dress is almost a smoke effect, save that it is fitted more closely at the waist and that the lower part flares sharply, coming slightly below the hips. The resemblance to a man's jacket is preserved by cutting a slight inverted V in the front and making the back noticeably longer.

BENEATH this is a skirt, which is fitted very tightly about the hips and descends in a straight line to a few inches above the knees, where a full and sharply flaring flounce is placed, likewise longer in the back than in the front.

This is particularly effective in the heavier materials, such as the taffetas, failles and moires—and not the least important of its features is the fact that the woman whose hips have just a bit too much avoirdupois can wear this model with delightful results, since the line of the hips is entirely hidden by the flaring line of the upper part of the dress.

The day-ray house dress? Well, we just want you to send a 2-cent stamp for it, that's all. Because it embodies so MANY practical and original ideas!

It has a double-breasted bodice for one thing. It has an extra apron for another, and it doesn't look like an apron at all, but exactly like a part of the skirt—and it is removable. It has detachable collars—but then, it just must be seen to be appreciated!

Necessary Evil? That's the Ladies

By MARTHA LEE

A group of homo sapiens of the more intelligent brand sat talking, with the express purpose of giving off ideas that might serve to label the "searching" or "keen." And, as usual, when men most want to impress other men, the talk came around to women.

Some of the epigrams, most of them in fact, were hardly flattering. The phrase that fluttered most about the air was "necessary evil." Yes, they decided that was what women were—necessary evil.

One boy, who perhaps had been more thoroughly tanned by some wide-eyed blonde, broke forth with the startling news that they were not an evil at all. Because, in order to be an evil, he said, the subject in question must have force and power, and women have neither force nor power—which followed, as the day the night (to be very poetic about the whole business) that woman could not possibly be an evil.

All Were Unmarried.

It isn't necessary to say these men were very young, is it? But it might be to say they were all unmarried. Because usually one connects such statements with disillusioned husbands or ex-husbands who are suffering from collapse of the wallet. (This is practically incurable.)

An argument about this, from a woman's viewpoint, would be futile, because the word upon which the men hinged their premise was not the correct one at all. If you will notice, the last and final (and most satisfying) statement they made was concerning the word "evil."

One fellow called women a necessary evil. The other said they could not be an evil, which was to admit they were necessary. If they are necessary, they have the force and strength and power to be an evil or anything else they want to be.

The word "necessary" was the word they should have quibbled about. But they didn't.

Here's One Man's View.

Anyway, read what this man has to say regarding women in general and one woman in particular.

Dear Miss Lee—I have been reading all these letters from men complaining about their wives and women complaining about their husbands until I do not wonder that three-fourths of the young people are afraid to venture into the matrimonial seas.

In contrast to this I want to sing the praises of women in general and one woman in particular, my wife. I have been married twenty years and I still feel that way about her too.

I started out on my voyage rather young, and I do. We were poor and had plenty of hardships. I could not give my wife any luxuries, and amusements were something unheard-of. But she inspired me and encouraged me to work and to get on my feet. I worked hard in hand with me until now we have things we never dreamed of having.

And we are still happy, still in love with each other, still as devoted companions as ever. I do not say I would not have succeeded without her. I do not know for sure, but I seriously doubt it. There were times when the discouragement was too much to bear alone.

But a word of encouragement to the young who are contemplating marriage said a word of advice, too, if I may be so old-fashioned. The secret of being happy though married is to work together, to meet the adversity to gether, to set a goal, whether the money or only an ideal or a dream, and work together toward that goal, with all the heart and soul. And do it. Do it with the determination of making a go of it. To feel that failure on either side would be shameful and inexorable.

Well, at least one man has found a woman who has filled his life with happiness and contentment. Which is not half as much of a revelation as the fact that he admits it. Perhaps he is just a sordid sentimentalist.

And then again perhaps he is an honest man who has found his wife neither a necessary evil nor even necessary, but just darned nice to have about.

MISS ROSEMARY SMITH TO WED W. B. RICHARDS

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Rosemary Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Smith, 2910 College avenue, to Wallace Bryant Richards, New York, son of Myra Reynolds Richards, 1446 North Alabama street. The wedding will take place in September. The couple will make their home in New York City.

Entertains Employees

Mrs. A. J. Mills entertained employees of the A. J. Mills Pie Company and their families with a picnic at New Bethel. A chicken dinner was served at Willow Brook inn at noon to sixty guests. Games and contests were on the program during the afternoon.

A YOUTHFUL AFTERNOON

6526. This charming creation may be finished without the fitch collar and sleeves. As pictured in the large view, printed chiffon was used. The long waist portions are gathered so as to blouse above a fitted hip yoke, to which the flounces and a foundation skirt are joined.

The yoke is shaped in a split curve in front. The long sleeve is set in at the regular armhole. Without the sleeve the shoulder is cut long over the top of the arm. Handkerchief, linen, or zephyr are also suggested for this model.

The pattern is cut in three sizes: 16, 18 and 20 years. To make the dress with long sleeves for an 18-year size will require six yards 35 inches wide or longer. If the collar is made of contrasting material it will require 1 1/2 yards 35 inches wide. If the dress is made without sleeves it will require 5 1/2 yards. The ribbon bow requires 1 1/4 yards. The width of the foundation skirt at the lower edge is 1 1/4 yards. The width of the lower flounce with fullness extended is 3 1/2 yards. Pattern mailed to any address on receipt of 15 cents in silver or stamps.

Schumacher and Coffey Rites Held

Miss Edna Mae Coffey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Coffey, Gaston, became the bride of George A. Schumacher, son of Mr. and Mrs. William M. Schumacher, 2724 North Meridian street, at a lovely midsummer wedding at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon at Carrollton Avenue Reformed church.

The Rev. Gerald Gebhardt read the service before an altar banded with palms and ferns and lighted with two candelabra. Two tall standards of lilies and vases of gladioli also were used.

Clarence Carson, organist, played a group of bridal airs preceding the ceremony, including "Liebestraum," Ariel Mulford sang "At Dawning," "I Love You Truly" and "Did Delt Bungalow." During the ceremony Mr. Carson played "To a Wild Rose."

Miss Etha Harrison, Peru, was the bride's only attendant. She wore a gown of flesh and rose tulle, bodice with ankle-length skirt, fitted bodice and long, tight sleeves. She wore a hair braid hat and carried Columbia roses tied with green chiffon.

Rollin Davis Best Man

Rollin Davis was best man and the ushers were John Schumacher, cousin of the bridegroom, and William Schumacher, his brother.

The bride wore a gown having a fitted bodice of ivory lace with long tight sleeves, and a long full skirt of tulle. She wore an ivory hair braid hat. She carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley. She also carried a real lace handkerchief, which the bridegroom's mother had carried at her wedding.

Mrs. Coffey wore a flowered chiffon dress and poudre blue hat. Mrs. Schumacher wore a blue lace dress and egg shell felt hat. Both had shoulder corsages of butterfly roses. A reception for members of the families was held at the home of the bridegroom's parents following the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Schumacher have gone on a wedding trip, the bride traveling in an oxford gray suit with a tuck-in blouse of pearl gray, piped with lavender. She wore a lavender felt hat. They will be at home at 3536 North Meridian street, Apartment 301, after July 23.
