

BALK $30,000 HIGH SCHOOL GRAB BY SHIPP

Irrington Plans Were Laid to Mulct Public on Heat Contracts.

BY BEN STERN.

Indianapolis taxpayers would have been mulcted of $30,025 if the state tax board had approved the plans and specifications for the heating and ventilating of the Irvington high school, a comparison of bids and data supplied the tax board indicated today.

The profit would have gone to C. C. Shipp, Indianapolis ventilating equipment manufacturer, whose equipment, according to a statement made by Carl Euron, school board building and grounds superintendent, is favored by the school board.

Investigation has disclosed Shipp has received a much lower price for his equipment in other communities than in Indianapolis.

Comparison of bids he has made in other communities and of prices he published in his yellow and green brochures showed striking variances. Herman Zietlow, another manufacturer, told the tax board that his bid was $4,575, and that of Shipp for the same type of equipment was $34,600.

Shipp's Figures Vary

The Shipp and Zietlow bids included radiation—the actual heating radiators. Radiation generally is figured at 35.5 cents a foot. On this basis, radiation in the Irvington school should have cost approximately $1,228. Deducting this amount from the bids, the base bids for ventilating equipment approximated $33,312 by Shipp, and $3,347 by Zietlow.

Since twenty-eight units were to have been used, the Shipp unit amounted to $119, while that of Zietlow was $119.

Shipp's bid was not consistent with figures in his "green book," investigation disclosed. There, Shipp's two types of units, specified in the Irvington high school plans, are quoted at $324 and $326 each. On this basis, it followed, the total ventilation and radiation bid on the Shipp system might have been expected to approximate $10,000. Had the contract been given Shipp, on his high bid, the deal would have represented an excess of $24,000 above the profit he allows himself in his own trade list.

Fir Prices to Situation

"I think it is a better system," was the only explanation given the state tax board by C. C. York, school business manager, when asked his opinion of the price difference.

Evidence that Shipp's prices may be fitted to situations was contained in bids he submitted for two northern Indiana school boards.

For a school at North Manchester, he submitted a quotation of $2,790 for thirty-four units. In this case his base bid per unit was $55.29, while his trade list price was $117. For a consolidated school in Union township, Elkhart county, his bid was $4,028 for sixty-four units, or a unit price of $69.95.

No ventilating radiators were specified in the Elkhart job, but were at North Manchester. In spite of this, the Elkhart bid was $19 higher than the other, and in Indianapolis mounted above the list price.

CALL FOR MORE FIRE FIGHTERS IN NORTHWEST

Forest Blazes Still Hold Upper Hand at Half a Dozen Points.

By United Press
PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 10.—After more than a week of fighting by more than a thousand men, the Pacific northwest's greatest enemy—fire in the forests—still held the upper hand today at half a dozen different points along the battle front.

State fire wardens were broadcasting calls for more men to fight a blaze which broke out late Friday a few miles from Portland and was raging through timber and grain lands.

Fire which started Wednesday on Whiskey creek in Crater National forest, southern Oregon, was still out of control today. Sixty men are fighting it and thirty more with fresh supplies have been sent to the scene. The blaze is six miles from any road.

Take Refuge in Canyon

A firebug or a careless camper caused the blaze which is the worst in Oregon in Rainier national park, Washington. A marooned fire fighting crew which took refuge Friday in a rocky canyon as the roaring flames forced them to flee, today was believed to be out of danger. Efforts were being made to drop food and water to them from airplanes.

The fire which the marooned men were fighting was but a small unit of the blazes which were still sweeping through virgin forest on the slopes of the northwest's highest and most majestic peak.

More recruits were rushed to fight fires in the Pend Oreille, Salway, Colville and Clearwater districts in eastern Washington and northwestern Idaho Friday night.

Indian Reservation Ablaze

The fire in the Colville national forest presents the most serious menace in that region, forest service officials at northwest headquarters here said.

Recruits also were called for Friday night to battle a blaze which burst from control on the Nez Perce Indian reservation in Idaho.

In British Columbia, which has been comparatively free from fires during the recent outburst, the town of Alenby was threatened by flames which broke out in timber on the international boundary Friday night.

A milling company at Princeton, B. C., has released 170 employees to aid in fighting the fire, and they are accompanied by fifty other men from the town.
