

WILLEBRANDT TO BE CALLED IN DRY PROBE

Senate Told 'Most Amazing'
Story of Prohibition on Record.

By Scripps-Hoover Newspaper Alliance
WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, former assistant attorney-general, is to be called by the senate—“ronage investigating committee to tell what she knows of what Senator McKellar describes as the most amazing prohibition story that he ever has heard.

McKellar said not only Mrs. Willebrandt, but other high justice department officials would be called “to find out why it was that a prohibition agent was tried for arresting the king of South Carolina bootleggers and the alleged liquor violator was allowed to go free and later became a prohibition agent.”

Assertion that Mrs. Willebrandt had a hand in the case was made by J. D. E. Meyer, United States attorney at Charleston, S. C.

The story as told to the senate committee by witnesses Wednesday follows:

Seize Many Stills

Alonso B. Seabrook, federal prohibition agent, and a group of state officers made a big liquor seizure in “hell’s hole,” the name given Berkeley county in South Carolina. They seized many stills and nearly 1,500 gallons of liquor.

G. D. McKnight, described to the committee as the “king of the bootleggers,” was arrested on complaint of Seabrook and other officers and bound over to the federal grand jury by a United States commissioner.

Meyer said following McKnight’s arrest, he was called to Washington to consult Mrs. Willebrandt, Lincoln C. Andrews, former assistant treasury secretary in charge of prohibition, and other officials. He said he was ordered to institute bribery proceedings against Seabrook and was advised it would be necessary to name McKnight as prohibition agent in that territory to clean up “hell’s hole.” Meyer said he approved the appointment.

Charged With Bribery

McKnight was appointed. Seabrook’s home was raided and he was arrested and charged with receiving marked money as bribes in liquor cases, McKnight being his chief accuser. Seabrook was tried and acquitted. McKnight soon resigned as prohibition agent and the case was closed until Seabrook appealed to the senate committee to air the facts.

McKellar said Meyer ought to be discharged immediately for his part in the case and said his name never would be confirmed by the senate. Meyer defended his action by saying that he believed it was more important to let a liquor violator go and trap a federal officer who was taking bribes. Seabrook denied that he had accepted the money and charged it was a frameup.

Don't Overfeed Dog; That Is Essential Thing to Remember

BY MRS. HELEN B. JILLSON
In summing up my little chats on dog lore for the layman, I feel the urge to reiterate a few outstanding pieces of advice, which, if followed, may avoid many bugbears so commonly connected with dogs, and instead of the nuisance and care he becomes the greatest pal one ever had.

First and foremost, do not overfeed. The simple diet for puppies and dogs. Feed your aged dog once a day, preferably at night or late afternoon. Have plenty of fresh water available, especially in warm weather, and give him a good run at least once a day. It is not wise to permit your pet too violent exercise soon after a heavy meal.

A watchful eye should be kept on teeth and nails of the older dog. The dark stains on teeth may be removed with a bit of pumice. Often, as the dog grows older, his habits are more sedentary and the consequence is the toe nails grow apace and unless filed down or trimmed cause lameness.

If a little time is given now and then and a coarse file used, the nails can be kept sufficiently short. The nerve grows down to the tip as rapidly as the nail grows, so that too generous cutting may be very painful.

Take your dog out on a leash on the cement pavement and the inclination to strain on the leash causes heavier contact with the cement. This is a splendid way to effect a canine manicure.

BRITISH STUDY NEED FOR FAST, LIGHT CRUISERS

Latest Designs Are Surveyed in New High Speed Program.

BY KEITH JONES,
United Press Staff Correspondent

LONDON, Oct. 24.—A program of concentration on high speed light cruisers which would have a remarkably long cruising range was advanced today in connection with the admiralty’s plans for new 6,000-ton war vessels.

In the light of the forthcoming five-power naval conference, the admiralty appears to be committed definitely to a policy of building small cruisers. The difficulty of designing light and speedy cruisers, which still have a fuel capacity sufficient to permit patrolling the distant trade routes of the empire has been the admiralty’s big problem. Naval experts pointed out that all fifteen cruisers of the so-called “town class” gradually are being scrapped as obsolete. These craft, built in war time, range from 4,800 to 5,400 tons and have a speed of slightly more than twenty-five knots. Their comparative “slowness” when placed beside the latest Japanese, Italian, French, and German cruisers is held responsible for their scrapping.

The British vessels, however, must be designed with a view to protection of the empire’s extensive trade routes, a factor which does not enter so dominantly into calculations of other nations. The British cruisers must be capable of covering great distances without refueling, as well as making high speed.

The admiralty is understood to be interested intensely in the astonishing performance of German’s new cruisers of the “Koenigsberg class.” It is said in well-informed sources that some of the advantageous features of the Koenigsberg craft will be adapted in the new 6,000-ton British cruisers.
