

EDITORS SHOW APPROVAL OF HOOVER STAND

First Message to Congress
Well Received by Many Papers.

President Hoover's first message to congress elicited the following editorial comment in various sections of the country:

NEW YORK TIMES—His desire for friendship with all the world, and for the cutting down of needless military expenditures, is transparently clear. . . . About the unhappy mess into which tariff legislation has fallen he speaks with less energy, and with a slighter inclination to assert his leadership, than had been hoped. . . . One detects an air of disillusion, if not of discouragement, in Mr. Hoover's final statement that "law can not rise above its source in good citizenship," and that if any law is "upheld only by government officials," it is at an end.

NEW YORK WORLD—The second part of the message, dealing with matters over which there is political controversy, is less vigorous and less illuminating (than the part dealing with promoting, aiding and improving worthy federal activities) . . . in dealing with the tariff, the message is also far from illuminating.

NEW YORK HERALD-TRIBUNE—It will not be the President's fault if he and congress can not co-operate effectively at the long session—as a whole the message is marked by its moderation, its actuality and its desire to incite co-ordination rather than controversy.

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER—The rebuke to congress on the tariff is mild, but it is a rebuke just the same.

BALTIMORE SUN—His latest word (on the relation of the federal government to the power industry) embodies a reversal of position. It is a wise reversal.

ST. LOUIS GLOBE DEMOCRAT—There is much that is wrong (with general conditions) and some of the wrong comes within the purview of his message, but the nation is not going to the "demonstration bow-wow." On the contrary, it is growing and progressing.

MUNCIE, Ind., Dec. 4.—In an effort to prevent injury to school children alighting from busses, county school heads here may order the use of front entrance vehicles exclusively. At a meeting of the county board of education the matter was discussed and it was pointed out that the system is working effectively in other places. This places the child's action entirely in the care of the driver.

SULLIVAN NEW U. S. SENATOR FOR WYOMING

Irish Immigrant Is Chosen as Successor to Warren.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., Dec. 4.—Patrick J. Sullivan, an awe-struck emigrant boy from Ireland forty-one years ago, ex-stevard and sheep herder, today is United States senator from Wyoming, succeeding the late Francis E. Warren, Republican, who died in Washington, Nov. 24.

Sullivan was appointed Tuesday night by Governor Frank C. Emerson, after a conference with the Republican state central committee.

Born in County Cork, Ireland, on St. Patrick's day, 1835, the newly appointed senator is a typical son of Old Erin and still speaks with a slight brogue. In 1888, when he was 24, Sullivan set out to seek fame and fortune in America, and at 64 has attained the highest office to which a citizen not a native born American may aspire.

Starts as Stevedore

He landed in New York with only a few dollars in his pockets and found employment as a stevedore on the docks.

Before a year had passed, Sullivan purchased a railroad ticket "as far west as my money will take me." Sullivan's life on the frontier parallels that of his distinguished predecessor, who worked his way to Wyoming as a section hand and became seven times United States senator.

Rises Slowly

He twice was elected mayor of Casper, served eight times as state ecessor, who worked his way to national committeeman since 1917.

He was a Hoover supporter during the national election. The newly appointed senator will leave for Washington after receiving his commission here Thursday. The Republican state central committee recommended a special session of the state legislature to convene Dec. 12 to pass on an amendment to the law authorizing a special election to fill a senate vacancy. The law was held ambiguous by Governor Emerson.
