This Car Can Park Here, but You Can't

When you've circled downtown blocks until you're dizzy, trying to find a parking place safe from yellow curbs and no parking signs, reflect that there's at least one auto in the city that never has this trouble.

It's pictured here, secure in its anchorage between two no-parking signs and within thirty feet of one of the city's busiest downtown corners, Washington and Illinois streets.

The property of the Indianapolis Street Railway Company, the coupe is to be seen most any hour of the day parked here in front of the Occidental building on Washington street.

But don't think you can beat this street car empire to this place and get away with it. For you'll get a sticker sure, just as did Albert F. Meurer, former city councilman, who is fighting the restricted parking provisions of the city traffic code.

Monday night, Meurer parked his car a few feet to the east of this spot in an area guarded by no-parking signs which, he says, shouldn't be there. He received a sticker and more ammunition for his legal attack on the parking restrictions in municipal court three, April 3.

Tape-line measurements today showed the first no-parking standard east of the Illinois street curb on the south side of Washington street to be thirty-five feet from the corner. Then comes the twenty-three-foot restricted area pictured between the signs here and containing the traction company's choice parking spot. Extending from the standard at the left in the photo is another no-parking area of twenty-two feet, until a standard is encountered ten feet from a fire plug. Meurer contends the traffic code did not give the safety board or police authority to restrict the forty-five-foot stretch between the corner and the fire plug zone against parking.

Thousands of persons from all walks of life lined the streets of Washington, braving a heavy downpour of rain to honor the statesman.

His body was borne on an artillery caisson, first to the Capitol building to lie in state, then to All Souls Unitarian church for simple funeral rites, and finally, to Arlington cemetery.

DEMOCRATS FIX JUNE 10 AS DAY FOR CONVENTION

State Committeemen Adopt
Rules Giving Women
Equal Voice.

The Democratic state committee today set June 10 as the date for the state convention to select candidates for state offices and judicial posts.

A committee on arrangements will be selected to take care of all the details.

Changes in the rules so as to give women members equal voting powers with the men in party affairs, as is provided by the 1929 statute, were adopted and R. Earl Peters, state chairman urged that the women's counsel be sought in all party affairs.

Reverse Process

The Democrats also adopted the same convention changes as the Republicans regarding the voting on candidates for the judiciary.

Instead of voting for candidates for state offices first, the process will be reversed, with the nomination for judges as the opening. Clubs and organizations desiring to operate as Democratic bodies will be required to obtain a certificate from the state committee.

Asks Co-operation

Peters urged that candidates for township trustees be put forward in every township in order that there will be a full ticket in the field.

Close co-operation of the county organization and subdivisions must be observed in order to obtain the best results, he added.

'BLACKLIST' ON RADICALS PUTS FIRE ON WHALEN

Sending List of 'Reds' to Employers Illegal, Say
His Critics.

NEW YORK, March 12.—While Grover A. Whalen, police commissioner, defended his drive against Communist "mass action," so-called liberals and others not associated with communism protested today against his "blacklist" of 300 Communists employed in large business organizations and in the public service.

Whalen said he sent his list to employers so that any movements "to organize against law and order" may be watched.

J. McKeen Cattell, former professor of psychology at Columbia university and editor of the Scientific Monthly and other publications, has written to Whalen, pointing out that his "blacklist" violated a section of the federal penal code.

Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for mayor in the last election, said he was organizing a move to remove the police commissioner from office.

Whalen said that while he did not deny the right of any individual to become a Communist, he was ready to block any "mass action" that is to say organized group action looking toward the destruction of lives, property and the public peace such as the Union Square affairs of last Thursday.
