

Haste Fatal in Marriage at Any Age

BY MARTHA LEE

In Wednesday's article I was telling you some of the hazards of early marriages, as I have gathered them from boys and girls who have written in for advice on the subject.

Unfortunately, most of the letters are written after the marriages are consummated, not before. And there isn't so much to be done then as there would have been had the letters been written before the foolish youngsters had signed on the dotted line.

I have tried to explain the folly of early marriages in so many different ways. There are exceptions where marriages between very young people turn out to be the happiest marriages we know.

But, generally speaking, they do not have the foundation to build upon that a marriage between more matured people has.

Youth Has Strength

A man, whose early marriage has been tremendously successful has objected to the fact that I harp continuously upon this subject. He contends that I am talking about hasty marriages, not early ones. And that hasty marriages between people of any age at all almost of necessity are doomed to failure.

The point is three-fourths of the marriages between boys and girls under 21 are hasty marriages. They are spur of the moment affairs. They are the result of a whirlwind courtship such as only youth can provide. Hasty marriages in later life probably are even more subject to failure, because in youth we have so many attributes that can ride a storm. Youth has hope and strength and a flexibility of character and disposition that makes it easier to conform to a new life.

Married Grown Man

My letter today is singularly pathetic, because the girl who wrote it is married to a grown man, while she, after several years of marriage, still is a child.

Dear Miss Lee—I am 16 years old and married to a man 36. I have a baby nearly a year old. I guess I won't need to tell you my husband and I do not get along together.

I am his wife and the mother of his child, yet he says I am just a child and must be treated accordingly. He has a car, which I am not allowed to drive, but his sister can have it any time she wants it.

He was married before and had a child. My marriage to him was a forced one. I can not love him as I should, first because he does not give me the respect a wife and mother should have and second because he treats me as though I were a servant of some kind. He says he is too good for me that he is ashamed of me. I am not ashamed of him, but I have worried about this thing since I look at least 25. My parents do not speak to me, and I have never had any place to go.

Here is the sort of tragedy that can come to a girl who marries too young. Being a wife and mother at the age when other youngsters are just beginning to have dates, just getting through their high school courses, is no joke, especially when the husband refuses to recognize the girl's status in his household as that of wife and mother.

Husband Shifts Blame

You have no alternative but to stick it out, discouraged. Your parents will have nothing to do with you, you say. Your case, if you have one, is for the juvenile court, not a divorce court.

If you should leave, what could you do to support a child less than a year old? When your husband says he is ashamed of you, he doubtless is shifting the blame on your shoulders. Surely, no man could help but hate himself for involving a girl as young as you in the tragedy he has.

You, like a lot of other inadaptedly foolish children, must pay for your mistake. You have a child now, and your child comes first. I should advise that you try to become friendly with your parents again, if it is at all possible. If they are human beings, surely they will make up with you if you make an effort. And they can help you better than any one else.

Indiana Boy is Brightest

FROM three to twelve. That's the period which is most important to your child's development. And that's the time many are retarded mentally and physically by constipation.

Watch your child, mother! At the first sign of bad breath, coated tongue, headache, biliousness, lack of energy or appetite, give a little California Fig Syrup.

This pure vegetable product cleanses, regulates a child's bowels without discomfort. No danger of forming the laxative habit when California Fig Syrup is used. For it tones and strengthens weak bowels. In colds or children's diseases, employ its gentle aid to keep the system from becoming clogged with germs or waste.

Mothers everywhere are eager to tell of the benefits secured for their children. Mrs. J. Clark Hale, of 3935 Broadway, Indianapolis, says: "I have used California Fig Syrup with Clark, Jr., for three years in cases of upsets, bad breath, coated tongue or constipation. It keeps him the brightest, happiest four-year-old I know!"

Look for the name California when buying. That is on every carton of the genuine, for your protection.

Employer at Fault When Wives Work

BY MRS. WALTER FERGUSON

The married woman in industry is one of our most talked about citizens.

The feeling against her grows as unemployment increases. She bears the brunt of the unhappy condition which confronts the nation.

And it can not be disputed that many men are walking the streets looking for work that is being done, in many instances, by wives whose husbands are able to support them.

There are certain kinds of employment in which women always will have the preference, that does not alter the fact that today they are holding down plenty of jobs that men could fill.

They are preferred for one reason only. Because they can be had for less money than men demand. Primarily, therefore, the real culprit in what some term "our economic crime" are the men who do the employing. So long as the pocketbook remains our divine symbol, this and many unhappier condition must continue.

If we had laws in this country compelling employers to pay women the same wage that men receive, the situation would adjust itself. And there's no good saying that women should not work for less.

Are men willing to work for less now, when work is not to be had at all? Does the man who wants a job more than he wants anything, haggle over the wage? He does not. And he stands today exactly where women have stood in industry ever since they entered it. We have taken what we could get and been grateful.

If this eventually has resulted in many good men being thrown out of work, let us put the blame squarely where it belongs—upon the shoulders of the employer. I have no doubt that married women who did not need work would have to return home if a fair wage scale between the sexes could be introduced, because men would rather hire men if they did not have to pay them more money.

At any rate, all this wall about women usurping men's prerogative is bunk. Greed is at the bottom of this condition, just as it is at the bottom of most of our troubles in this country.

So long as men regard the dollar as more important than the individual, we shall suffer.
